night David Jones' house in the Beech-borough Grange subdivision was burned borough Grange subdivision was burned to the ground.

The fire was caused by a coal oil lamp exploding, and the family had just time to escape before the interior became a blazing furnace. In fact the fire flared up so swiftly that Mrs. Jones had not even time to secure $60 in bills which she had in the house and the money was burned up with the furniture.

The Earlscourt brigade started to drive out to the fire, but turned back when they discovered it was so far away.

The total loss is estimated at $2000.

Bert Webber, secretary to the gunnery lieutenant on board H.M.S. Aboukir, writes to his brother Charles of 143 Simpson avenue, an interesting account of his narrow escape when that ship was torpedeed in the North Sea. The writer gave a thrilling account of the confusion which accompanied the sinking of the Aboukir. When completely exhausted after a struggle with a comrade, he was pulled into one of the rescuing boats in a semi-unconscious condition.

"I was relieved from watch, and straightaway turned into my hammock for a couple of hours. The next I remember was a shouting and rushing of feet. I had not the slightest idea what was wrong, but I tumbled hurriedly out of my hammock and, without waiting to put any clothes on, went on deck, where at first I could not see anything owing to steam and smoke, and then heard that it was one of our boilers that had blown up. Thinking that to be the case, I want back to my hammock and fully dressed myself, boots and all; then I began to notice the ship was getting a list to port.

Everything Perfectly Orderly.

"I might say that everything was perfectly orderly, the stokers were ordered o nthe forecastle, the marines on the quarter deck, and the seamen were employed in different ways, under the orders of the commander. It was about twenty minutes after the ship had been torpedoed that the order "Every man for himself" was given. What Canon Plumptree described the best concert he had heard in years was given in St. James' Parish Hell last night under the auspices of the Willing Workers' Society, for the benefit of the Red Cross fund. The program was arranged by P. D. Ham, a number of well-known artists condetention camp. Twenty of them re-cently were brought here from Niagara Among these May Wilkinson, a gifted young contraito, sang, with rare expression and depth of feeling, "My Dear Soul," by Sanderson, "A Râiny Day," by Blumenthal, and other selections. Pearl Forfar had an opportunity to display her splendid soprant voice in "A Birthday," by Cowen, her rich, full voice being especially clear in the upper register. George M. Ross, tenor, aroused much enthusiasm with "The Deathless Army," by Tro-tere, while Mr. Percy Ham gave a number of selections with fine effect. A. Leslie Parker also appeared in vio-lin selections, which he gave with great expression. Dr. Ham's march militaire, "Canada," was rendered by violin, piano and organ, and proved a very stirring number. The accompanists were Ruby Forfar and Clarissa Mann, and at the close the capacity audience expressed their very hearty expression of the program.

Six Hundred Submitted.

Some six hundred scenarios, written by amateur and professional writers, from Vancouver to Nova Scotia, were submitted to the company, with an average of excellence absolutely surprising. Especially did the judges comment on the fact that so many fresh and novel ideas had been unearthed, ideas that hitherto had been quite foreign to the motion-picture earthed, ideas that hitherto h quite foreign to the motion

This is entirely apart from the technical perfection of the scenarios. Considering the fact that scenario writing was a new art to the greater portion of the contributors, the following of the prescribed forms for this branch of the theatre, was very encouraging.
