FOSTERING

So Says Hon, Rodolphe Lemieux, Who Reached New York Yesterday on His Way Home - Connaught -Told Him He Was Likely to Accept Governor-Generalship.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15 .- Bubbling over with enthusiasm for the future "new South African union," Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux reached New York to-day and to-night started on the last lap of his world circling tour. Captain Hector A. Verret, Mr. Lemieux's secretary, accompanied his chief on the mission. Mrs. Lemieux and Mrs. Verret met their husbands at Naples, and the party left last night for Montreal with Dr. Eugene Lemieux, who has been here since Thursday awaiting the arrival of the Celtic.

"South Africa is not Canada, of course, but it is a great country," said the Celtic. course, but it is a great country," said Mr. Lemieux to the representative of the Canadian Press, who was the first to reach the deck as the big ship was warped into her dock. "We had a splendid voyage across," he added, "not a ripple and we were far enough out to avoid the fog which detained the Megantic seventeen hours just outside the harbor. I have become quite a sailor, for it took us 17 days from Southampton to Capetown, while from Durban to Naples it took us just 31 days.

"They have everything that could be desired to make a splendid success of their union," continued Mr. Lemieux, "and up to date the union is working fine. Unionists Will Ask What Government Has Done About U. S. Situation.

(Canadian Associated Press Cable). (Canadian Associated Press Cable).

LONDON, Jan. 15. — Prof. Hewins, speaking at Rochdale, said that when parliament met the Unionists would want to know what the government has been doing regarding the situation that has long been developing between the United States and Canada, and what has been done regarding the decision of the control of the call red of the control of the call red of the ca definite pledge about the "all red" project in the Unionist policy. The Unionists would find that tariff reform would mean the introduction of a new spirit and an ideal which would find its expression in the co-operation of the self-governing dominions.

What the Lords Can Do.

The Marquise de Fontenoy, writing in The New York Tribune on Saturday, says:

When the Right Hon. Sir James Parke, judge and baron of the court of the exchequer, received from Queen Victoria a peerage as Lord Wensleydale, 'for the term of his natural life,' the house of lord wensieydale, for the term of his natural life, the house of lords, in February, 1856, by an overwhelming vote, refused to permit him to take his seat among them. It did not deny the contention of the government of the day, voiced by the lord high chancellor, that the crown had possessed and exercised the right of creating life perages in the reign of Richard II., but declared that it objected to the hereditary character of the house being broken up and restricted to hereditary character of the house being broken up and new modeled to the extent desired by and according to the discretion and interest of the cabinet for the time being." The house of lords stood by its guns, and crown and government were obliged to acknowledge defeat and to yield in the matter. "Were the present government to carry out the threats voiced by Lord Crewe, secretary of state for India, and other members of by Lord Crewe, secretary of state for India, and other members of the administration, and succeed in securing from the crown the creation of five hundred new peers, sufficient to endow it with a majority in the upper chamber of the national legislature, the lords might again declare that they objected to have 'the house broken in upon and new modeled to the extent desired by and according to the discretion and interests of the ministry for the time being,' and refuse to allow the new peers to take their seats.

to allow the new peers to take their seats.

"Or they could also, by a vote of the majority, suspend in turn each of the new peers as he took his seat. According to the terms of the English constitution there is no tribunal to which he could appeal in the matter, and thus it will be seen that the hereditary legisletors arrayed against the veto bill and the government can view lators arrayed against the veto bill and the government can view with relative indifference the menace of a wholesale creation of peers, even if the sovereign were to comply with the demands of the present administration to that effect, which, especially after the recent elec-administration to that effect, which, especially after the recent election, is unlikely in the extreme.

"It may be of interest to add that in the case of Lord Wensley-dale the opposition to his elevation had nothing whatsoever to do with his personality, but was based on the nature of the dignity which the crown, at the instance of the government of the day, sought to bestow upon him. Later on, when he was granted an ordinary peerage, with descent to his issue in the male line, he was warmly welcomed. Speaker Lowther, who for several years past has been presiding over the deliberations of the house of commons, is his grandson.
