the Prussian Cabinet is unanimous on the Agrarian question. The Agrarian party in the Diet is very strong, much stronger than in the Reichstag, and the speeches showed that even the National Liberals support the Agrarians on many questions.

Herr Watheren, National Liberal, assured the Government that there was a deep feeling of dissatisfaction caused by the agricultural depression in Western Prussia, as well as in the East, and that the sugar crisis had severely hurt the Rhine provinces. He also expressed the belief that Cuba, under the Americans, would quickly become a dangerous competitor with the German sugar industry, and recommended the Germans to form a sugar trust and raise home prices.

The Agrarian leaders, Mendelsteinfels and Von Wagenheim, were more violent, calling on the Government to abolish the commercial treates and exclude American, Russian and Austrian agricultural products.
