

PRINCE OF WALES TAKES OFFICIAL FAREWELL OF CANADA AT STATE DINNER

Says He Is Determined To Return As Soon And As Often As Possible To The Dominion—Renown Will Sail This Evening.

HALIFAX, Nov. 24.—Promising to return to Canada soon and to return often, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales took official leave of the Dominion tonight, in a speech which overflowed with the royal appreciation of all that had been done for him during his tour. The speech was delivered at a state dinner given this evening at the Halifax Club by the Federal Government in the penultimate function of his royal highness' last full day in Canada. Following the dinner the prince dined at his host's home, and at a ball given at Government House.

At noon, tomorrow, the prince will leave the Dominion for the United Kingdom, which will preserve as a landmark the ancient town clock, erected by the Duke of Kent upwards of 100 years ago, and at sunset the Renown will sail for England. Golf and luncheon abroad the prince will occupy the remainder of the day.

The Renown arrived at Halifax shortly after 8 o'clock this morning. At 10:45 the governor-general went aboard to pay his respects, and his excellency was followed an hour later by the lieutenant-governor of Nova Scotia. The prince, accompanied by his royal highness, came ashore for a gala of aquatics at Artillery Park, and later attended the dance given by Mrs. Charles Archibald.

Walking Half Mile. From the function the prince walked a half mile to Government House, where he changed into his ordinary evening dress. He arrived at the Halifax Club for the state dinner a few minutes after 8 o'clock. A huge crowd had assembled in the street and the car bearing the royal guest was the signal for a tremendous outburst of cheering which continued until the prince had entered the building. For a few seconds he stood at the top of the steps and waved his hat to the delighted throng, from whose throats came the tumultuous greeting.

The state dinner was a brilliant affair. Gathered in the dining-room of the club were the elite of the Dominion, distinguished soldiers wearing the insignia of many orders, statesmen who have guided the destinies of the country throughout its worst trying years, public men, noted jurists and captains of industry.

The prince was received in the lounge and there the guests were presented. Entering the dining-room, his royal highness was greeted by the national anthem, and took his seat on the right of the Duke of Devonshire. The toast to the King, and was immediately followed by the prince, who gave "The Governor-General." Only two speeches were made throughout the evening, that of Sir Robert Borden and a brief address by his royal highness. Sir Robert, who was received with a round of applause, in the course of his speech said: "Your excellency, your royal highness, and gentlemen: I feel that I must thank the members of the Halifax Club for their kind and generous hospitality at the disposal of the Government for the gathering this evening. I have the feeling that the prince has been placed to no better purpose than to say farewell to the young Canadian, our guest, who has so thoroughly enjoyed the admiration of all throughout the Dominion. He has done more, he has gained the affection of the whole Canadian people in the past three months. "It is not my purpose to inflict a speech on his royal highness tonight, but I have a shrewd suspicion that he has had about as many speeches hurled at him in this Dominion as he can stand. He is a man of few words, but he is a man of many deeds. He is a man who has applied for a divorce from his husband, and whose sole reason was that she had not taste for him. The prince has no doubt lost a taste for speeches, and he will be delighted if these are curtailed somewhat."

Has Won Admiration. "There are, however, some things that must be said. As far as the reception of the prince is concerned, he has made on the Canadian people an impression that does not leave one word necessary to be added. He knows of the absolute whole-hearted admiration of all, but even in the Dominion of Canada we realize constantly the need of a better understanding with each other to be followed by a more thorough co-operation. How much truer then does one understand the need for such in the world wide community of nations who owe allegiance to the British flag.

It is also true of an understanding between the sovereign and the people that there should be that mutual service so needful in the preservation of our institutions. That has been given by the visit of his royal highness. Apart from the personal touch the crown represents to all the Dominions the majesty and unity of the empire, but beyond that is the warm affection that has greeted the person of his royal highness everywhere throughout Canada.

"The prince, like his royal father, is a member of the Canadian bar and as such he is a very natural and perfectly natural at all times and under all circumstances. The great charm that has won the hearts of Canadians, I feel that I do not wish to say much more, and in closing I will use for the purpose of the refrain of the old favorite song: 'Better loved ye cannot be, will ye no come back again?'"

The prince spoke as follows:

"Your excellency, Sir Robert Borden and gentlemen: It is with the greatest regret that I bid a temporary farewell to Canada tonight after three months' tour which I can never forget. It has meant much more to me than I can properly express, and I shall attempt only to say a few words tonight, but I want you all to know that I feel much more than I can say.

"This, my first visit to Canada, has done two things for me which will influence the whole of my life. In the first place, Canada has given me such wonderful welcome throughout my travels, all the way across the Dominion from Halifax to Vancouver and back, she has shown me such kindness and hospitality, she has in fact so thoroughly spoiled me, that I have been feeling more and more at home all the time. The result is that I am not only intensely Canadian now, but that I shall feel a Canadian all the rest of my life and shall never be happy if too many months elapse without a visit to my home on this side of the Atlantic.

The other great thing which this first visit has done for me is to give me a thorough understanding of all that Canada stands for on the North Atlantic continent. I realized that pretty fully before I left Ottawa for this night, but I realize it even more fully now, since my visit to the United States. You are the guardians of British institutions upon this continent, and your development as a nation of increasing power and influence, factors in determining relations between the British Empire and the United States.

"This wonderful journey through the Dominion has meant so much to me that I appreciate in the fullest degree the wisdom of what you, Sir Robert, said just now about the value of constant personal intercourse. Nothing can go wrong with the British Empire if all nations maintain this intercourse and understand each other's standpoint.

"Feeling all this very strongly, I also appreciate most deeply what Sir Robert has said about the value of understanding between the sovereign and his people throughout the empire, and I can assure you that no one feels this more keenly than I do. I feel the king's feelings in this respect need, I think, no explanation from me in view of the fact that he has sent me on this four months' journey this year in spite of my four years' absence from the country during the war."

"I think that I need not reassure you either on my own behalf, for I mean to see as much of the Dominion as of Great Britain. You will notice that I have not used the word 'good-bye' and I do not intend to use it because I hope to return to Canada soon and to return often. But I mean my future visits to be less formal. I want to travel as you travel. Sir Robert—like a Canadian in his own country, and not as an extra special visitor who may never turn up again.

"But at the conclusion of this more or less official tour, during the whole of which the Dominion Government has looked after me with such kindness and hospitality, I must thank you, Sir Robert, and all your Government, for the generous care which you have taken of me and for all that you have done for me and my staff. Sir Lionel Hallex and the other members of my staff are more than grateful and appreciative of your kindness. I have that so reciprocate in some degree my strong desire to be in Canada again soon and as often as possible—my reply."

At the conclusion of the dinner, the prince immediately set out for Government House.

LOOKS FOR ANOTHER CONTINENTAL WAR WITHIN 30 YEARS

Col. W. G. Barker, V.C., Says

It Will Be Fought Entirely in the Air.

WINNIPEG, Man., Nov. 24.—There will be another continental war within thirty years, and it will be fought entirely in the air, according to Colonel W. G. Barker, V.C., D.S.O., who arrived here today en route to his home in Warren, Man. Colonel Barker declared that that commercial aerial service across Canada would be established within the next three to five years. With Colonel W. A. Hishon, who is interested in two companies, one on this side and the second on the other side of the international boundary, Colonel Barker has already ordered three hundred planes from England, each capable of carrying three passengers.

SECOND MAN FACES TRIAL ON CHARGE OF MURDER AT GALT

Stoyko Boyeff Also Accused of Killing John Sorokaty.

[Special to The Advertiser.] KITCHENER, Nov. 24.—Stoyko Boyeff, the second man to be charged with the murder of John Sorokaty, the Russian who was killed in Galt on May 25 last, was placed on trial in supreme court here today before His Honor Mr. Justice Loebe.

He is defended by M. A. Secord of Galt, while the crown is represented by J. A. Makina of Stratford. Practically the same evidence introduced in the trial of Ivan Petroff, now under sentence to be hanged on Jan. 23, was introduced today. The crown rested its case at 5:15 this afternoon, when the defence opened with the introduction of Mrs. Stevely of Stratford. It is believed the defence intends to lay emphasis upon the alleged conflict of evidence concerning the presence of Boyeff in Galt and Stratford on the night of May 23.

The defence will also attempt to show that Boyeff's assistance to Petroff in killing Sorokaty upon the death man does not implicate him in the murder. The case will go to the jury some time tomorrow afternoon.
