Co-Operative Trading

One of the effective educative influences of the time is The Canadian may not be so wide as many others, co-operative trading will learn in a have thought of their responsibility direct and practical way what is not and their duty in this matter. What always to be had from books and the Consumers' Gas Company has ac academic discourses. The conditions trade are so various that no one rule roll" before us should prove to be them. The nearer we can come to carrying out this duty. perfect freedom the better, so long as the element in human nature which PUBLIC OWNERSHIP PIONEER. tends to encreach on the liberty of tends to encroach on the liberty of others is sufficiently guarded against. Nearly all the laws that exist have been formulated to take care of this factor, and nearly all the complaints against law are due to the injustices that arise out of such laws heavies that arise out of such laws heavies that arise out of such laws bearing into his own as witnessed by the hardly on those who do not need them very able and exhaustive address dethe federal government and to the Brantford City Council. The recommendations to the municipal council appear to us to be more practical than those made to the government, inasmuch as they are more likely to be carried into effect, or more possible of attainment. The desirable and the possible are always a long way apart in legislation and the shrewdest and in legislation, and the shrewdest and most useful legislator is he who perceives the available step in advance that may be taken at the moment.

Those who engage in co-operative trading educate themselves in a multitude of ways which they may never have thought of previously, and they gain such experience in actual dealing with business as enables them to apply the universal principles of business in other fields than that in which they have become acquainted with them. Knowledge, after all, is the first essential for the reformer and co-operation is a first-class method of gaining knowledge, and at the same time gaining distinct material benefits. Brantford is headquarters of the co-operative union and there are branches in six other provinces.

Two Great War Scribes

Two brilliant writers are visiting us in Europe. There has never been a war in which it would have been posconveyed to those who stay at home either to help or to hinder. The satisfactory and comforting thing in the case of both these heralds of war is the optimistic tone of their reports. There is no minimization of the difficulties, no shurring of the danger. All this is allowed for by the men who have gone thru the battle fire and choked in the battle smoke. Capt. Beith, so widely known as "Ian Hay," avouches that the war only began last Dominion Day, and while he does not set the date of the end with the same precision, he is quite satisfied about what the result will be.

Our other square-jawed, forceful visitor from across our border line represents a different strain of sentiment, but it is one that blends deeply and easily with our own. He does not talk of the troops with which he has campaigned as a neutral. They are his own men, of his own blood and conscience. And there are 28,000 of his fellow-citizens fighting under the British flag. It is interesting to note the proprietory way in which Mr. Palmer talks about our assaults on the

It would be an excellent idea if other large concerns who have hundreds of men overseas would get out a similar morial to be handed down in the families to which they belong; to be a reference book of the comrades who also "belong," and to be a record of the civic heroism of the men of Canada for all time.
