RAPID MASTERPIECES
(London Tit-Bits)

One of the most famous books of recent years is "The Roadmaster," by Michael Fairless. It has gone into edition after edition, and was the first and last work of a quiet little girl, the niece of the great Archbishop of Chester, Dr. Edward Barber. This book is one of the most rapidly written masterpieces in literature. It was written on the young author's death-bed in the short space of nine days, and during this time she took no nourishment of any kind save a little iced water.

Bishop Heber, while on a visit to his father-in-law, Dean Stanley, wrote "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" in fifteen minutes, making but one correction, the change of "savages" for "beasties" in the second verse.

The present Lord Tennyson tells in his charming biography of his father, the late Poet Laureate, that he wrote "Crossing the Bar" in a few minutes. He had been down to Salcombe, near Brixham, where there is a bar which makes a curious mooring. He sat on the cliffs listening to it, but it was not until long afterwards that the great lyric came "like a flash of inspiration."

Dr. John Brown wrote his famous "Rab and His Friends" in an evening. Dr. Johnson finished "Rasselas" in a week, and Lord Byron wrote the "Prisoner of Chillon" at a sitting.

A REXALL STORE FOR CARLETON

Wasson's Open a New Drug Store On The West Side

Owing to the increasing demand for Rexall products, Vinol and others of Wasson's exclusive lines, from the people of the West Side, this well known firm of King street druggists has added another store to the three now well established in this city. The new store on the West Side is situated in King street at the corner of Union, one of the most central localities possible.

Cloran J. Hay, the dispensing clerk of the King street store, is managing the new store for the opening. Mr. Hay is a registered druggist with a thorough knowledge of the drug business. He will be able to look after the business to the satisfaction of all.

Drugs, patent medicines, toilet articles, candies, cameras, stationery, etc. will be sold in this store at Wasson's prices. It is the idea of the management to carry everything in stock that a modern drug store should have. This store will no doubt prove to be a great convenience for the people of the West Side of the harbor.

THE HEAD TAX

Editor Times-Star:—

Sir:—According to a statement in the Cotton Factory Times, published at Ashton Under Lyne, Lancashire, Eng., Mr. Cudlip, manager of the St. John cotton mill, is credited with the following remark:—

"To the best of his knowledge no one in their employ had been asked to pay the head tax."

Why, I should like to ask, is an employee of the Canadian Cottons Ltd. ever asked to pay the head tax, while other new comers have to "tough up"?

In my opinion the by-law is ridiculous. Under the by-law the miller is obliged to have to pay while the majority go free.

Whether the by-law should be enforced or it should be repealed, as at the present time its enactment is far from satisfactory.

DEATH OF HENRY FOREN

Leaves Wife and Five Little Ones—Two Others Buried This Year

Pathetic circumstances surrounded the death of Henry Foren, which occurred in the General Public Hospital early this morning, after an illness of about four weeks with typhoid fever. He leaves his wife and five small children, and since March 10 had buried two small children. The oldest child living is only eight years of age. Mr. Foren was a baker by trade, having been employed in V. S. Vincent's bakery and later in the bakery of George J. Smith. The sympathy of friends and acquaintances will go out to Mrs. Foren and the little ones in their sad bereavement. The funeral will take place on Monday afternoon from his late residence, 130 Marsh road.

MANY EACH YEAR LOST IN LONDON

Metropolis is Best Hiding Place In World

SOME NOTABLE CASES

Great City Where Neighbor Does Not Know Neighbor and Where Many People Disappear Day—Vain Searching

(James Sberlier in Weekly Express.)

"Penny," says Hodge, "all them smart police in London and can't trace a well-known man who's been missing nearly a fortnight. An' a millionaire too. It's vot I've always said—London's shamefully overrated. They think they're smart, but about and about they're no better 'n' us in the country."

Poor old Hodge! It will be news to him and to many others that on the day that Joseph Wilberforce Martin disappeared in London somewhere about fifty other persons vanished also. A similar number were lost the day before, and a similar number the day after. But nothing appeared in the papers about them. London is great in everything, even in the number of the lost. The capital does not boast about its mysteries, else we should be more awed than ever at its immensity. It is so only when something of the grim fact that somewhere about 2000 people disappear every twelve months within the area looked after by Scotland Yard.

Hiding in London

Many of the missing persons turn up in a large number of ways. London is the best place on earth for a friend to hide. It is the most mysterious and most wonderful maze ever inhabited by man. To look in London for a friend who has disappeared is like looking for a needle in a haystack, or a diamond in a desert, or a pearl in the Pacific Ocean. One can live in London a life-time and travel about it and not know one-tenth of its population. Within the last twenty years quite twenty murders have been committed in London which have gone untraced. You may be quite sure that the murderers are alive, are in London. They are probably living very near to police stations, for it is a popular and a foolish belief among criminals that if you want to keep your name out of the papers you must pitch your tent close to the peg on which the bracelets hang.

The London detectives would be proud indeed if they could only halt and seize the man who vanishes in the capital every year. But they cannot. Some time ago two girls studied together in a room in the West End. One night they were hanging pictures and they found that they had run short of a nail. One of the girls, who was named Jane, went to the shop, but she was without hat or coat, so a little shop round the corner sent her to the street to get a hat and coat. The girl never returned. Inquiries showed that she did not visit the shop, and she was never heard of since.

Vain also were the efforts to trace a girl who came up from the north of England to a situation in a northern suburb. It is known that she reached King's Cross safely, but there was no sign of her. Her husband has gone, and she has not been heard of since.

There was the young solicitor who left his chambers in the West End one night morning last year and was never seen again. Everything humanly possible was done to trace him, but all in vain.

Old "Emma"

I know an old lady who has been trying to find her missing husband for thirty years. She lives at Hamstead Hill, in the capital, where neighbors, so far from being friendly, are terribly suspicious of one another, a husband or a murderer without being discovered. If London would only be a little more of the provincial street, a little of the "How do you do?" habit on the stairs or over the garden fence, a little of the countrywoman's friendly chat at the green-grocer's cart and the fishmonger's barrow, there would be a better chance of finding the missing man. If you want to acquaint yourself with the tragedy of London's lost go one morning to the river-side. Last night a paragraph appeared in the newspapers about the body of an unknown person having been taken from the Thames. It was conveyed to a mortuary. Look at the searcher—rich as well as poor, high as well as low, well dressed as well as ragged. They have all lost someone—a parent, brother, sister, son, daughter. As they creep into the mortuary you can see fear tracing the letters of his name across their countenances. They want to find the missing one, but not here. "Thank God!" an elderly lady says as she turns from the slab. Shivering in her agitation she enters her motor-car and is driven quickly away. But she will come tomorrow. A loved one is missing and she knows that the Thames has solved some of London's biggest mysteries.

A friend of mine, a private detective, is making quite a little fortune in London for no other reason than that it is a land of mystery and intrigue. Who ever heard of a countrywoman becoming suspicious of her husband to the extent of having him watched by a detective? But in London this is common, because the capital is a great showdowland with millions of hiding places and millions of bodies protected by the mortuary from the public eye. That young friend of yours who is flushed with ambition and means to come to town to make his fortune—if he should fall he need not feel ashamed a bit. If he wants to hide—well, London will find a corner for him. And nobody will ever find him until he wishes them to. London is as mysterious as she is great.

Morey Was Wild

The wildness of Captain Dave Morey in the box seat Dartmouth a victory against Lafayette in Hanover on Wednesday. The box score shows a series of errors for "Dave," who must have had out sets at Madison Square Garden, New York, last November.
