

THE TOWN WAS SAVED.

He was not romantic to look at; indeed, there was something almost comic in the short, stout figure, clad in his washed-out blouse, and the wrinkled, sunburnt face under the faded bonnet, round and yet in the heart of Pierre Goblet there were thoughts and feelings that might have done honor to some knight of olden times.

In the summer of 1870, when the Franco-German war was at its height, Pierre Goblet stood one evening at the threshold of his home, smoking his pipe. The old mill which had belonged to the Goblets for many generations, was built on the summit of a rising ground, and could be seen for many miles.

The miller smoked thoughtfully as he gazed out before him along the white dusty road that led to the town. He was quite alone, for the few men he employed about the mill had gone to St. Andre with their empty wagons until the following day.

The miller smoked thoughtfully as he gazed out before him along the white dusty road that led to the town. He was quite alone, for the few men he employed about the mill had gone to St. Andre with their empty wagons until the following day.

Pierre Goblet had one child, a daughter, who was married to one of the chief shopkeepers of St. Andre. Babette was a young and pretty woman. She was very fond of her father, yet she sympathized with him as little as any one in the town.

"Ah! child, that is the spirit of the age that would shirk all responsibility," the old man answered sadly. "But that was not what the soldiers in my young days were taught. Then each man who went to swell the numbers of those conquering armies felt that it rested with him, individually, whether the end should be victory or disaster."

The twilight deepened as Pierre Goblet stood by the solitary mill, gazing dreamily out before him. He was so lost in thought that his pipe had died out unheeded, and he did not hear the sound of approaching footsteps. It was only when a heavy hand was laid upon his shoulder that he turned and found himself surrounded by some half-dozen big men in the Prussian uniform.

"Monsieur le Miller, we have come intrude ourselves upon you," the captain said. "Remember that you cannot do us no; so take matters with a good grace and bring out quickly all your hard-boiled in the way of meat and drink."

The officer seated himself at the table, and the men waited upon him before satisfying their own hunger. Then, seated, bread, and wine were placed in a basket, and two of the men left the cottage carrying it between them.

Still, that blazing wheel must attract attention, and one moment was enough to give an alarm. The smell of fire, the noise of burning wood, brought the Germans hurrying from the cottage. But Pierre Goblet heeded them not. He stood there gazing from the window, though he was almost blinded by the flames as they passed close to him.

The old man's eyes glowed with rapturous happiness as he gazed up into the starry heavens with a mingled cry of gratitude and supplication. Then, as he felt that the fire and smoke were overpowering him, he roused himself for one last effort. Waving his hand toward the German soldiers, he shouted in a voice that rang out loud and clear, "Vive la France—Chamber's Journal."

When Dulcie Heywood married the minister, and was starting on a blissful little bridal journey, her Aunt Dorothea took pains to observe that, although married, she was by no means out of this troublesome world. Dulcie felt in her heart of hearts that she was not good enough to be a minister's wife, at least not very good.

At first the good-bys, and the journey, and the few days which always seemed to her to have vanished into the sea, they came to their home, and life in earnest commenced. If anybody had hinted to Dulcie that in less than two years she would echo her Aunt Dorothea's words, she would have shaken her pretty head and thought that loving Paul as she did, she could bear all things; the sweet dreams of her girlhood had not prepared her for so much happiness.

But Dulcie's husband was called to work in an old vineyard. Days came when he felt that the soil was worn out, or the seed had fallen among thorns; his duty was to repeat words of promise and warning, and the daylight slowly faded. The officer who had taken possession of the cottage was joined by another, a younger man, and they sat together over the fire, smoking and talking. Above the chimney-piece was a crowd picture of the first of the war.

Then Pierre Goblet turned his eyes away from the mill and looked straight before him, to where a few miles distant—the little town lay; and he thought of its unconscious inhabitants. They little knew that night by which would bring them, that to many it might be their last on earth. Next the old man looked towards the wood. It was grim, dark, impenetrable. But in his fancy he could see men armed to the teeth, who watched and waited, ready at the first word of command to spring upon the prey.

All at once the light of inspiration came into the old man's face; his eyes glowed with a sudden eager hope. He did not hesitate for an instant. Carefully he clambered down the ladder back to the granary floor. First he took a dark lantern from a shelf and lighted it; next, he found a long thin stick, which he placed with the lantern ready for his use.

Pierre Goblet replaced the empty can, again taking up the lantern and the stick, he mounted the ladder, once more, but before he proceeded with his operations he glanced in the direction of the town, and a smile was on his lips as he murmured: "Ah! my little Babette, one man—and an old man too—may make a difference!"

Pierre Goblet knew that within a very short space the whole mill would be on fire. The small of fire, the noise of burning wood, brought the Germans hurrying from the cottage. But Pierre Goblet heeded them not.

meeting or church. Her daughter told him that she is too feeble to get out. "Carpet and chairs at a prayer meeting!" Mrs. Hopkins looked perfectly aghast. "Do you think," said Dulcie, "that we are nearer heaven on a wooden bench and bare floor? Would you invite a guest into a room in your house furnished like the one into which you ask the Lord to enter?"
