A Paris correspondent tells the follow-ling story: "There are in Paris many public places of resort in which ladies are not allowed to enter unless accompanied by some representative of the stern-er sex. Among these places is favorably known by American travellers who go there to enjoy the fresh, cool air of the garden while listening to the strains of a very remarkable band of musicians. Quite recently a lady presented herself at the gate and was stopped by the controleur ticket receiver: 'Pardon, madam, ladies cannot go in alone.'
