Columbia, equal, it is said, to five it was not until a very few years ago Magaras—one of the greatest industrial assets this province contains—Occidental.

Pouring down from the mountains and from the glaciers that fill the gorges of the northern ranges, comes enough water every day to develop electrical power equivalent to three million horse-power. This figure is not based on flood conditions, but is the estimate arrived at by Government engineers working during low water seasons and using a conservative basis of estimate. The mighty falls of Niagara, when all the water that is available on the Canadian side has been harnessed to the turbine will produce only 650,000 horse-power. British Columbia's mighty rivers and the State river, is ample to take care of present needs, and of the needs of the cities and of the needs of the cities and of the recommunities of the lower mainland for some time to come, the total water-nower available. come, the total water-power available in the province is sufficient to provide power, light and heat for forty clites and industrial centres of the size of Greater Vanccuver and New Westminster combined. British Columbia possesses in the liquid weath that pouses dever the hills the equivalent of five Niagaras with all that this means for the future of the province industrially when these waters are harnessed and turned to the needs of men.
