work. Rough I doubt of his physical capacity for over-work, against which he ought to be warned.

Li Adams running in Colchester seems to revive the Othomides' renown.
But it cannot restore the old man's strength. One sympathizes with his desire not to be forgotten in the hurley-burly; but I never saw any special ability or usefulness in him; and he seems to have forgotten his Horace, before he accepted the nomination.

Hopson is off in Antigua seeing his Bishop no doubt. He never really liked politics and seems strongly disposed to be a judge again. He will not do to think him too anxious to escape; it is not that way. He and I started with desperately heavy weights to carry, and we have an almost insane desire for certainties in life. Besides, to be a judge has
