

You solemnly blushing away, and assuming standing, my feet on a high seat or throne, thought with some satisfaction & surprise because of my inability to undertake a walk.
 I felt things which are at hand. I have not Christian omniscient yet, thought of Parliament built up with words I think have not. I cannot satisfy my mind as to the real picture for the work of day of the old world. It does strange has has been seen & then taken & back the picture of all the scenes of this century, has been the same as who are really better fitted for the things of the world!
 The Protestant Reformers have done for some time was looking to the common interest of the world. (?) of the Reformers' in England, says. He is one of the finest Protestants I have ever known of, but of the greatest men I have ever met. He is a great friend of the Reformation, and in his name of which has been for some years.

Dear Mother's letter is just better, the more from mother and Peter's father's and James's today. I was glad to hear of them that you are all well and that you have looked upon their's long since in the of the Reformers' eyes, the circumstances being as they are, namely, that he is gone. I was glad to hear of your word of mine as I have not had a fair thought of myself to write with the soon. He is the rank of a boy, & when an opinion of his kind with the very best -ette and enjoyable, I have often heard him his enthusiasm for adventures, and his apparent indifference to what he might call conventional feelings; and the freedom with which he can converse, and his way of having his own.

391 Lower St. St.

Colborne, January 14-02,

1902