In Memoriam

THE death of Mr. Hutchinson will be a distinct loss to the bee-keeping world, and those of us who were fortunate enough to know him best loved him as a brother. While I was not unprepared for the news yet it came as a severe shock. I cannot bring myself yet to believe that this quiet, modest man, who rarely spoke at conventions, but whose words will long live after him through the printed page, has gone. I could never think of him as a competitor, and when his paper grew I was sincerely glad.—E. R. Root in Gleanings.

Requiescat in pace.
