The Earl of Camperdown.

The Earl of Camperdown, who has been appointed Lord-Lieutenant for the County of Forfar, in the room of the late Earl of Strathmore, is a great-grandson of Admiral Duncan, who was raised to the Peerage after the brilliant naval victory he gained over the Dutch fleet, under the command of De Winter, in 1797, of Camperdown. The new Lord-Lieut-enant, who possesses a fine residence enant, who possesses a line residence on the Tay, not far from Dundee, succeeded his father as Third Earl of Camperdown and Fourth Viscount Duncan in 1867, and is now in his sixty-third year. He is a backelor, and the heir-presumptive to the Peerage is his brother, the Hon. George Haldane-Duncan, who in 1888 married an American lady, daughter of the late Mr. John Dove of Andover, Massachusetts, and willow of Mr. John Adams Blanchard of Boston and Nahant.

A few days ago a clever and re-ligious American, Bryan, was in my house and asked me why I consider manual labor indispensable. I told him that, first, it is a sign of sincere recognition of the equality of men; secondly, that it brings us nearmen; secondry, that it brings as leta-er to the majority of the working people, from whom we are fenced off by a wall, if we profit by their need; thirdly, that it gives us the highest bliss and peace of conscience, which no sincere man utilizing the work of slaves has or can ever have.—From Count Tolstoi's Letter in Independent.

"I got temporary relief, but it came back again and again, and for six long years I have suffered more misery years I have suffered more misery and agony than I can teil. It was worse than death. My husband spent hundreds of dollars for physicians', prescript ons and treatment, without avail. Findly we moved to Bosque county, our present home, and one day I happened to see an advertisement of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoet Remedy with a testimonial of a man who had been cured by it. The case was so similar to my own that I concluded to try the result was wonierful. I edy. The result was wonierful. A BEAT THAT FAILED

HOW THE PLANS OF AN ENTERPRIS ING EDITOR WERE UPSET.

The Climax to the Great Dobbins Domino Match Race as It Developpolitan Afternoon Dailies.

"I never read of a close finish in a big running race nowadays that I'm not reminded of a famous punctured scoop in which I figured when I was working in a New York newspaper office," said an old time telegrapher who is now employed in Washington.

was acknowledged as the greatest twoyear-old of the season.

"The exception was Richard Croker's flier Dobbins. These two youngsters finally met in the Futurity, and, although the Keene colt won, with Dobhins third, the latter's owner was not satisfied with the result, and a match was speedily arranged at the Futurity distance for $10,000 a side.

"Now, the paper I worked on was an evening sheet, and it was the ambition of the managing editor's life to beat the opposition evening paper and get the news of a big event like this on the

"The other fellows had beaten us on the Futurity story a few days before, and the managing editor made no secret of the fact that he was going to get even. "Accordingly he laid all of his plans a day ahead, and, although we did not know at the time what they were, we felt sure by the way he strutted around on the morning of the race that he had the winning combination up his sleeve. "Along about noontime of that day editor, the most nervous man I the ever met, called me into his office and told me that, as the match race was the fifth event on the card, he wanted me to have one of the other operators take the result of the fourth race, and he also wanted me to get a wire in good working order and prepare to get the result of the fifth race.

"The scheme was to have two presses set and all ready to start. One of them was to have the big front page headline read 'Dobbins Wins the Big Match,' and the other just the same, except that Domino's name appeared in the place of Dobbins'. The Dobbins extra was on press No. 1 and the Domino extra on press No. 2. Whichever horse won, the managing editor was to call out No. 1 or No. 2, and the press would be started in quicker time than it takes to tell of the arrangement.

"I couldn't help but inwardly smile as I watched the managing editor striding nervously about, waiting for the start, just like a man who had thousands of dollars wagered on the chance of one of the racers. "Suddenly the key of my instrument began to click, and he quickly stopped and looked anxiously at me, but it proved to be only the operator at the other end testing. Learning this, he resumed his walk up and down the room.

"Presently the key began to click again. This time the horses were on their way to the post. The next I got from the other end was that the horses were at the post and would be off in a minute. This information, instead of steadying the managing editor, only increased his jumpiness, for he ordered the men who were standing around to cease their talking and also called downstairs half a dozen times to know if everything was ready below in the press room. "In the midst of this the key again began to work, and I called out that they were off. "The clicks of the instrument that followed now told me that they were moving along, nose and hose, at the quarter. At the half mile Domino was in the lead by a nose, and as I an-nounced this I was watching the managing editor, and I could see his lips framing the words 'No. 2,' which was the Domino press.

"Dobbins just managed to shove his nose in front at the three-quarters and the boss moved nearer the speaking tube as I made this announcement. Coming into the stretch the two game colts were head and head, and the managing editor, with the mouthpiece of the speaking tube pressed tightly against his lips, was waiting for the result. "Well, the result came along in good season. But never so long as I live shall I forget the expression on that editor's face when the key told me that editor's face when the key took me that the match race was a dead heat. I hes-itated just a second before calling it out, for I could almost picture in my mind what effect it would have on him. Finally I called out in as firm a voice as I could, 'Dead heat!'

s I could, 'Dead heat!'
"Well, that editor's knees just gave way from under him. If he had not grabbed a chair I am positive he would have fallen to the floor.

Flogging in the Army.

A somewhat antiquated story has gained currency to the effect that a an who recently came into the Church Army's Home at Bow was Crucifiction tattooed on his back in the belief that if ordered for punishthe belief that if ordered for punishment the sight of such a design would save him from stripes. He must have been a very old soldier indeed to have entertained such a Flogging in the British Army was abolished some thirty years ago, and is now never practiced, except in military prisons. The case of a re-fractory or malingering soldier in rison would be investigated by board of officers, and a certain num-ber of lashes might be ordered, just as in certain civil cases.

During the war in America soldiers were frequently found to have the Crucifiction tattooed on the arm, but rather as a charm than as a speci-

One of the last cases of flogging in One of the last cases of logging in the British Army was that of a man at York, who had been guilty of desertion, and was an altogether mauvais sujet. He was one of the Queen's bad bargains. Nowadays, the same kind of impossible person, on committing any such offences as tribing an officer is sentenced to a on committing any such offences as striking an officer, is sentenced to a term of imprisonment with hard labor.

nerations ago with those of to-day, generations ago with those to day, the results going to show that chest, and hip measurements are now three inches on the average more than they were sixty years ago. This same conclusion is reached by the experience of the ready-made clothiers. These facts, whatever may be their convenient description of the control of generality, do not quite dispose of the question of degeneracy. They are what we should expect from the more abundant and cheaper food of the people, their better housing and im-proved sanitary surroundings, but the testimony regarding the unitness of recruits and progressive lack of stamina in town and especially manu-facturing populations cannot be disrenerality, do not quite dispose of facturing populations cannot be dis-regarded.—London Telegraph.

More Than Son of His Father. More Than Son of His Father.

The news that a son of Sir Edmund Barton, the first Premier of federated Australia, and now Chief Justice of the Commonwealth, has been selected as the Cecil Ithodes scholar of New South Wales, is interesting on grounds of heredity. Sir Edmund had a remarkably brilliant career at the Sydney University, winning two of the most valuable scholarships and the university prize for larships and the university prize for all-round distinction, and graduating with first-class honors. By a provision of the New South Wales Constitution Act, the University of Sydney became entitled to send a member to Parliament when it had member to Parliament when it had 100 graduates on its roll. Sir Edmund was the second and last member for the Sydney University. A Reform Act abolished university representation as inconsistent with Australian democratic conditions; but Sir Edmund had no difficulty in finding another seat.—London Chronicle.

Keep in mind:

Lieut. Ernest Shackleton, who succeeds Col. Bailey as secretary to the Royal Scottish Geographical Society, owes his appointment, in part at all events, to his share in the discovery expedition to the South Pole. Lieut. Shackleton, who was the third lieutenant of the vessel, created a record in company with Capt. Scott and Dr. Wilson, by penetrating farther south than any previous explorer. An attack of hemorrhage of the lungs, by which he was seized on the jour-ney back, made it advisable for him to return home with the relief ship before his comrades.

About the Bees.

Considerable attention was given to bees at the annual Farmers' In-stitute of Michigan. G. Rowe of Grand Rapids said that if his bees never made him a pound of honey he would still keep them on account of would still keep them on account of the advantage they are to fruit. He does not think that spraying trees does as much harm to bees as is of-ten supposed. Professor Hedrick claims that bees do not injure fruit An excellent illustration of the value of records has been afforded lately regarding the question of physical degeneracy. A firm in the north of England has compared the measurements for cluthing made two generations ago with those of to-day exceptional degree, killing very many of them.

SEQUELS TO STORIES.

The question of sequels was under discussion in a literary gathering the other day, and the consensus of opinion was decidedly against them. It was even roundly maintained that no se-quel had ever been a success from the literary point of view. Some one de-murred and suggested "Paradise Regained," but that suggestion, greeted with a burst of laughter, practically "Paradise determined the argument. Regained" was a distinct falling off from "Paradise Lost." It might even be declared a dignified, dismal failure. No; Milton's sequel was no exception to the rule.

If there be a rule, are there any exceptions that prove it? Stevenson's "Catriona" was not up to the level of 'K'dnaped." Mr. Anthony Hope wrote a better book in "The Prisoner of Zen da" than he did in "Rupert of Hent zau." Wise authors never undertake sequels. Once upon a time Mr. Rider Haggard was tempted to adventure sequel to "She," but repented at discretion. It is altogether a different matter when successive books include the same character. Thackeray used that trick in "Pendennis" and Newcomes," but in no sense is the latter a sequel to the former. In a way Thackeray's novels may be said to constitute a chain right down from "Esmond." The links subsist, but there is no continuity of narrative which defines a sequel proper.

He who will may compare the respective merits of Zola's "L'Assommoir" and "Nana." There does not appear to be much to choose between them, but undoubtedly the earlier book has been more popular. Zola's habit, as is well known, was to keep the same families in his various treatises, for to him they were specin ins of natural history and mightly portentous. Con-trast with Zoo our immortal Fielding, who began one of his novels by way of a parody of Richardson. It would be interesting to collect into one volume the stories of the masterpieces. In what circumstances were the great books of the world written? A Japanese Shrine,

A romantic custom of the Japanes is described in the "Kokoro" of Lafcadio
Hearn. It is narrated that those who are anxious for the safety of absent ones repair to the mountain of Dake yama to perform a singular rite. There is a shrine at the summit to commemoprincess of antiquity who dails watched hopelessly until she pined and died, when her body was changed into stone. One who looks with the eyes of a believer still sees the princess or Mount Dakeyama in the shape of a perpendicular rock. Before her shrine are heaps of pebbles, and those who ascend to pray for the safe home coming of one they love take a pebble away with them as a talisman. And when at last reunited with the beloved, another pilgrimage is made to the shrine on Dakeyama to replace the pebble, with a handful of others, in devotional gratitude.

Carlyle's View of Macaulay. Macaulay, the historian: "We have had Macaulay for two days. He was a real acquisition while he lasted and gave rise to much good talk, besides an immense quantity of indifferent, which he himself executed—a man of truly wonderful historical memory, which he has tried in really extensive reading and has always lying ready, with this or the other fact, date or anecdote on demand; in other respects constantly definable as the sublime of commonplace, not one of whose ideas has the east tincture of greatness or originality or any kind of superior merit except neatness of expression."

Sir Henry Thompson, who was equal-ly famous as an author, an artist and a surgeon, was once staying at a country house with another surgeon of great fame, and somehow the talk turned on fame, and somehow the talk turned on the number of letters that each re-ceived. When the post arrived only one or two letters came for Sir Hen-ry, while his friend received an im-posing batch. The friend proudly call-ed attention to his mail. "Yes," said Sir Henry, with a twinkle in his eye, "but I see yours are all in black edged
