HIS LORDSHIP'S ROMANCE

bright summer morning some few years ago.

Out upon the lawn of Severnoke Castle stood a young girl just in the first spring-tide of youth. There was something in the brightness of her face that harmonized with the beauty of the day. It was a picture that an artist would have immortalized—the variety of flowers of every color that diversified the green grass of the lawn, and the golden anbeans that lit up the scene. The centre figure, which seemed to concentrate the light and brightness, was that of the young girl, Florence, the only child of Lord Wyverne. A plain morning-dress of white muslin showed to advantage the slender, girlish figure. The rippling golden hair was simply tied with a blue ribbon; the lovely, half-childish face was a poem complete in itself. It was a face that changed with every thought—one moment. gay and Florence, the only child of Lord Wyverne. A plain morning-dress of white muslin showed to advantage the slender, girlish figure. The proper of the young firlish figure is the slender, girlish figure. The property thought—one moment gay and bright, in another thoughtful and sad. There was passion and deep feeling, and, withal, a quaint kind of imperious, half-wilful look that charmed even mode the regular features or the violet eyes.

Lady Florence was wilful. The friends who admired her most and loved her best admirted it. She had been spoiled all her life—had known no law, no will, save her own, no well-medited rebuke, no lecture, ever fell to the lot of Lady Wyverne's daughter. Her very faults were smiled at as being part of her pretty, wilful, fascinating manner, that no one wished to see changed. She was a fair picture—a type of English beauty as she stood this summer morning. In her dainty white hands she held some pieces of bread, with white hands she held some pieces of bread, with white hands she held some pieces of bread, with white hands she held some pieces of bread, with white hands she held some pieces of bread, with white hands she held some pieces of bread, with white hands she held some pieces of bread, with white hands she held some pieces of bread, with white hands she held some pieces of bread, with white hands she held some pieces of bread with the pretty tame white dvoes; and the nit was that the picture became beautiful.

The voice; and the young girl's a magnificent peacock that was called the warm color that flushed his face.

"Hush, Floy!" said Lord Wyverne. "White was the slightest and pretties and pretties and pretties are she heard the words.

"I am so sorry," said Florence, as her face changed. "Pray forgive me, Mr. Lynne," in ever dreamed there was anything serious. What can we do?" "Mr. Lynne a cup of tea,

There was the slightest and prettiest air of embarrassment in the young girl's face as his eyes followed her every movement, although she affected to be quite unaware of his close observation. She revenged herself, however, by making many little speeches to the birds which were intended for him.

These little symptoms were not unnoted, for at the window of the breakfast-room, which opened upon the lawn, stood Lord Wyverne himself, watching with an eager and scrutinizing glance, the faces of his daughter and his guest. With one look at Lord Wyverne's face his history was told. Years of wild dis-the faces of his daughter and his guest. With one look at Lord Wyverne's face his history was told. Years of wild disorder, unbridled indulgence in vice and folly, had left unmistakable traces. The bent figure, the dimmed eyes, the fur rowed brow, the trembling hands, told their own tale. Lord Wyverne was not much above fifty, yet he was an old man. He was wont to boast that he had seen more of life in his fifty years than other men had in a hundred. Most probably that was true. He had spent a noble fortune. When it was all gone he married an beiress, and in the course of a few years he spent her fortune also. Lady Wyverne died, the doctor said, of heart disease, her friends said of despair, leaving one only child. Florence.

Ruined in fortune, shattered in health, sated and wearied of the world in which he could no longer play his favorite part, Bord Wyverne gave up his town house and came to live upon the estate he had so long neglected.

It is not a pleasant picture to gaze upon, this ruined spendthrift, this possessor of a noble name, the descendant of a noble race, who had bartered honor, character and fortune for mere pleasure. There were times when he turned in disgust even from himself; and such a moment was the present, as he stood watching his daughter's face and trying to understand its expression.

"It would do charmingly," he mutter-the towned the continued. "I have been happier than I ever was in my life before. I only regret that it ends so baruptly."

Mr. Lynne looked half bewildered, and stood for a moment as though inclined to dispute the charge; but she gave him a saucy little mutinous smile that sent him to breakfast in an unusual state of mind

Lord Wyverne stood at the window. He did not leave it while his guest exchanged greetings with him. There was a wistful look on his worn, worldly face. "Have I rested well?" he said, in reply to the young man's inquiries. "Yes, as well as I can do with the remembrance of a lifetime of folly strong upon me. I do not like my nights, Philip. In the daytime I can disperse my ghoststhe ghosts of lost years; but in the night they draw around me, and do not let me rest. I have been thinking, as I stood here, that perhaps it is not too late to begin even now to do something better. Do you know what would happen to Florence if I were to die?"

"No," replied Mr. Lynne, looking at him with surprise.

"Why, she would be left penniless," said his lordship: "porer even than the poorest housemaid in the kitchen—literally and truly penniless. I have got through every farthing of her mother's fortune. I have lost five thousand pounds in one night's play. There is uothing left now but the addition.

She held out the cup of tea, and Philip drank it hastily; he could not eat, and she watched him wistfully as he pushed the plate away.

"Are you very grieved." she asked, suddenly,

"Yes," he replied. "I esteem Lord Lynne very much. I should grieve to lose him; and if he dies all my life will he so terribly changed! The first trouble is, that I have to leave Severnoke and you."

I ought to have saved money for her," he added, deepondingly.

"It is a strange position for her to be placed in," said Philip Lynne, gravely.

"You would say so if you knew how she has always been treated—like aome queen regent," said Lord Wyverng. "She has been mistress of Severnoke ever since she was old enough to walk, and there are not many places in England to compare to it. Just imagine being penniless after reigning here!
