And so they have a pair of weigh cales down at Dunlop. Well, that is scales down at Dunlop. Well, that is better than nothing. Dunlop evidently has a future, a great future before it. But until last week we weren't aware that it had for a quarter of a century been known as a great trade centre. But so says your correspondent. Some-how, we were under the impression that until the last few years Dunlop was known as "Anthony Allen's corner," and as to its being a trade centre, it surely must be a horse trading centre he has reference to, for with the exception of a reference to, for with the exception of a lot of blind, knock kneed, ringboned, spavined, pollevilled old plugs, we have never heard of any other species of mer-chandise changing hands there. Your correspondent's evident delight in havdore.

That $150,000 breaks us all up-it does, for a fact—and no wonder. Right be-fore us in black and white we have it, that a considerable portion of the time spent in those same long and arduous duties, was occupied in singing such songs as, "Old king Cole," "For he's a jolly good fellow," "We wont go home till morning," etc., intermingled with cat salls, offensive epithets, and other such rediculous tomfoolery that one heir berries. such ridiculous tomfoolery that one is almost led to believe that it must be an account of the midnight orgies of a lot of dockwollopers in some low dive, he is perusing, instead of the parliamen-tary report of the doings of our sapient legislators. "We wont go home till morning," they yell. Certainly not, gentlemen, certainly not; use your own judgmens. But why not say "till autrouble tumn?" This poor, beggarly, mortgag-ed, improverished, bankrupt country would be only too happy-like a grinning ape of a barkeeper—to stand the expense, "The pleasure of you comparty, gentlemen," and so forth, and so forth.
