"You see, Philip," she said sadly, in conclusion, "that you have not married Arley Wentworth, after all, but some poor, nameless waif, who was cast up by the sea and brought here by misplace and priviliges, while she has enhardships and poverty.' nd true, he would at once have taken is wife in his arms, and told her that though he might have married the "real watch somewhat nervously, "it is al- and walking to a window, looked mood-Arley Wentworth," yet, having won woman whom alone he loved, he would be content, and the stranger taining you so long. I presume you might have all else, and welcome. He turned, almost fiercely, upon Ina, and said, with scornful, curling lips, and in tones that were cold and stern: "Surely you can expect no one to believe a trumped-up story like thismere fabrication, cunningly woven, am bound to confess-which will not bear investigation, and must-let me assure you—fail of its object."

"But, Philip," Arley interposed, and shrinking to hear him speak so severely, "here are the very clothes she ore when she was found, and this little chain and ring, which Aunt Angeline recognized at once." 'Yes," said Miss McAllister, "I bought that ring and had it marked, and I must confess that I was a trifle hurt when Arley was brought to us and it was not on her hand, while she wore, instead, a fine and costly emerald. It was, of course, a more expensive ernament, but whoever presented it could not have done so with more icve that I experienced when I sent my simole offering to Evelyn's child. I tried to think, however, that her finger might that I was wrong, and its absence is fully explained."

Philip scowled at the inoffensive little trinkets and the garments which his wife and Miss McAllister asserted, proved so much.

Can the heavyweight championship 1:164. be justly decided on points? This is a question that is puzzling the followers of the prize ring as the time for the Jeffries-Corbett fight in San Francisco while her graceful form was drawn approaches. The battle is to be a 20-round affair and Corbett is conceded to have a chance to win on man is mistaken; I have spoken only points if he can last through the hour's milling, but in the minds of many this would not give him fair title to the highest honors of his class, corroborate it, and you would find for championships have never dependit very difficult to prove it before a ed upon the ability of a fighter to keep away from his opponent.

In the history of the prize ring there If shall never try to prove it before has never been a case where the title of champion among fighters above 158 pounds in weight was conceded to a man who did not fairly whip his opponent, either by a knockout blow or by the seconds of the defeated man throwing up the sponge, as was the case in the famous Corbett-Sullivan fight in New Orleans, and although the conditions of the San Francisco fight are such that Corbett will probably be entitled to style himself champion, technically, if he wins on points, the general public will never concede that he has justly earned it.

Of course, conditions are not the same as they were even as recently as when Fitzsimmons won at Carson City. Finish fight are now out of the question and bouts of 20 rounds are a luxury, but it is to be hoped that the coming battle will be a decisive one and that it will end inside of 20 rounds to 1 and 8 to 1, 3.
