LURES MAD PRINCESS

Beautiful Cousin of Khedive of Egypt Dances on Stage Under Assumed Name.

Cairo, Egypt, Sept. 27.—Somewhere in a French music hall, probably in a cafe chantant in Paris, the beautiful Princess Zahia Hanum, cousin of the Khedive of Egypt, and daughter of the late Prince Husein, is singing and dancing her way into the hearts of unsuspecting audiences under an ase sumed name. So far as Cairo knows, it is the first time in history that a real princess, a member of a reigning family, has broken the fetters of conventionality and undertaken to earn her living behind the footlights.

From his highness down to his humblest subject all Egypt is talking of nothing else these days than the escapade of the daughter of the "Father C. S. TAMLIN, V.S.—OFFICE AND of Treasures," as Prince Husein, who hospital, 453 Talbot. Phone 865; resiwas one of Egypt's richest men, was nicknamed. And the wonder of the people is enhanced in view of the fact that the princess inherited all her father's vast wealth, to say nothing of the fortunes of two husbands whom she married in the short period of her, marital experiences.

Erased from Royal Books. As one result of her defiance of traditions of Egyptian royalty, the princess' name has been erased from the list of the khedival family, and so far as the khedive and his ministers can order it, Zahia Hanum no longer exists. But she sings and dances none the less blithely on that account. Her life has been full of romance.

In some respects her career parallels that of the former Crown Princess Louise, of Saxony. But there is a great difference between these two women of royal rank, whose desires for the freedom of women of untitled rank led them to outrage custom in equally startling fashion. It is the difference between the Occident and the Orient, the difference between the poles. An only daughter, and famed throughout Egypt for beauty quite as much as for her prospective inheri-

cousin, who died within a year, leaving a fortune. She then traveled extensively in Europe and saw for the first time the type of woman that is only whispered about in this country. At Trieste her travels came to an DR. LEON PATRICK, GRADUATE LOS little. And the next act of the independent princess stirred her kinsfolk

The general, it transpired, was poor, and his love was based chiefly on a desire to share her great wealth. As soon as Zahia discovered this she rid MARRIAGE LICENSES ISSUED BY herself of her second husband in the Paris fashion by way of the divorce court. If she had hurled a bomb into the khedive's palace she could not have caused a greater stir throughout Egypt than by this extreme violation of her country's immemorial custom. Mohammedanism does not countenance the divorcing of husbands by wives. This is a privilege reserved for men in Mohammedan lands, where there are no divorce courts. When an Egyptian husband tires of his wife, he says simply, "I divorce thee, once, twice, thrice!" and it's all over. She
