Tan Yang was evacuated by the rebels without attempt at resistance, and at once occupied by the Imperialists. It is believed that the whole of the open country in the province is cleared of rebels, and Lieutenant Futai will soon march with his forces to join the siege of Nankin, which is likely to be assaulted at the end of the hot season. Considerable anxiety is felt by the native merchants at the rapid destruction of the granite sea wall in Hongehow Bay, which has led to the partial overflow of the rice districts which surround Ningpo, and to fears of starvation from the failure of crops.

The Franco-Chinese and Imperialist forces were encamped, May 18, some distance from the city of Hoochow. The rebels were strongly posted on the adjoining hights. The Futai of Keangsop was about to dispatch 40,000 men to aid the Chekiang troops in the
