The Legislature of Illinois has passed an Act requiring railway companies to equip their locomotives with electric headlights. The law has no reason in sound railroading, but electric locomotive headlights are made in Illinois, and the act is good for business. In Chicago is an ordinance forbidding the use of dazzling headlights on automobiles on the ground that they confuse a person who gets in the path of the rays. Dazzling locomotive headlights in or near a station or in railroad yards must have the same effect.
