The machinery through which the Morgan firm transacted its huge volume of American purchases will stand, in part, however, and probably will be utilized by the American Government. The Morgan firm, it was indicated to-day will continue, to a large extent the activities in purchasing for the Allies hereafter under the decision of the central purchasing agency.

J. P. Morgan spent several hours to-day discussing the situation with Foreign Minister Balfour of the British delegation, and afterwards with Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Crosby. Mr. Morgan discussed with Mr. Balfour the future relations between the Morgan firm and the British Government. Whatever commissions have been paid by the Allies in the rast will be saved to them in the future. In addition the Allies also will spend here a sizeable sum, estimated at the very lowest at $100,000,000 monthly, out of their own income.
