The ceremony was short, and to the point, and to the point. In an incredibly brief space of time, Jim and I had put out signatures to the certificate that made us one for life.

It all seemed like a dream to me. I was very nervous. I wanted to get away from the gloomy offices, away from this great city, out to the freedom of the countryside, with Jim.

I remember that after it was all over Jim's mother kissed me, and a tear trickle down my cheek. Her emotion was not in any way superficial. She adored my Jim—as any mother would adore such a son.

Then the three of us climbed into the wedding breakfast. It was really lunch, though we gave it the old-fashioned name.

I can't remember much about that hunch. Jim was tremendously attentive. But all the time I was looking romined to the point. In an incredibly brief space of time, Jim and I had put out signatures.

Wive. But all the time I was looking round for Alice, or Tony, or some other disturber of the peace.
Nothing, however, occurred to mar the occasion. I felt thankful for the respite. That it was only a brief respite. I felt sure. My conscience wasn't glear.

Wiss Fellers is a school teacher. Her story was that when she was a high school girl in 1896 she met Howe, several years her senior and of a family possessed of large holdings of land. Howe was manager of the estate for his glear. mother. Miss Fellers agreed to marry him, but he said he must stay with his mother as long as she lived. Meanwhile he showered gifts and attentions upon
