

fail to result in great good. Mrs. Ball was present at our regular meeting in November as Presbyterian visitor.

As we review our year's work to many it may seem small. We cannot measure it. We leave it in our Master's hands, whatever it has been, knowing that some good has been done, some soul has been encouraged, and as we enter upon a new year may we do so with greater earnestness of purpose than ever before. The field is the world. May we remember that in benefiting others we benefit ourselves. May each member feel her own individual responsibility in making our meetings more interesting. Let us not bury our talents, thus wounding our Master, but do what little we can to interest others, and in this way extend His Kingdom in the lives of those around us.
