ROBERT WARWICK IN BIG PART AT GEM

"The Man Who Forgot" a Powerful Prohibition Play--"Battle of Bunco Hill" a Rich Fun-maker

"The Man Who Forgot," shown at the Gem last night in its new programme, is a feature film that thrills and entertains from the first reel to the last flash of the last reel. It has excitement, intense interest, a charming and thoroughly delightful love story and tells a tale of exceptional merit. Beginning with a scene in China the action ranges to Washington and throbs with life throughout.

Any person with more than a passing interest in the theory and the practice of prohibition will find something to think about in this Brady-made World picture, "The Man Who Forgot," with Robert Warwick in the star role and Gerda Holmes and Doris Kenyon as the principal actresses. The hero is a rejuvenated dipsomaniac whose inspirational eloquence on the prohibition subject stirs the American nation to its depths. The play has several quite extraordinary "mob" scenes.

National prohibition is a matter of such deep interest to the prohibition societies of Washington that they turned out by thousands when they were asked to assist in one of the scenes. The members of these societies are seen parading to the Capitol to add a national prohibition bill, which is being urged by the hero of this drama. The members of the society were delighted to give their services for the picture and their appearance in the drama is effective indeed. But this film is filled throughout with equally effective scenes and altogether it is a striking and very successful production. The pictures of the United States Congress in session are very interesting.

Mr. Warwick has a difficult role to enact. The part calls for a wonderful display of dramatic ability and he plays with force and power. As well known he is an eminent English actor. Gem patrons have seen him before and welcome him again in this very striking play.

The Gem's Own Comedy Company offered "The Battle of Bunco Hill" for the entertainment of its growing list of friends and it succeeded well in providing a half hour of fun and jollity. A tuneful chorus opens the play and the curtain rises on a war scene, officers, Red Cross nurses, tent, etc. Miss Randolph sings a solo nicely and Hughey Conley and Miss Lytton are heard to advantage in a duet with a bit of dancing following.
The comedy starts with the appearance of Dick Baird and Harry McInerney as bandsmen. They have a very funny "musical" turn and then things start to move swiftly. The enemy approaches and it becomes the duty of these two gallant non-descripts to save the day.
Then the fun waxes furious and the house is in an uproar of merriment until the curtain falls.

The Gem will continue this programme until and including Friday night, with an entire change on Saturday afternoon.

LEUT. J. T. DOWNEY WAS ONLY SLIGHTLY WOUNDED

Writes of Recent Big Raid on Enemy Trenches--An Encouraging Letter

The following letter has come to Mrs.
John Downey of Torryburn from her son, Lieut. J. T. Downey:
Dear Mother and Sister:

No doubt you have read about the "big raid" we have pulled off on the Hun trenches, and of the prisoners and machine guns, etc., which we captured.
Yes, it was a successful raid. I managed to capture ten Hun prisoners in my trenches, which I took with my platoon, and was wounded in getting off with a slight wound in the back of the neck, being hit by a piece of a shell; luckily it wasn't a direct hit, just a graze, and not very deep. I am now in a hospital, where I expect to be for about a month; just about this morning. I am feeling fine, and more or less pleased to get a rest, as we worked hard in preparation for the raid. Don't imagine my wound is bad enough to take me to hospital.

The Hun didn't put up much of a fight, wherever we met them in the trenches. They simply threw up their hands and begged us not to shoot or bayonet them; in most cases we didn't.

We didn't have very many casualties.
Those we did have were mostly walking out cases, as was my own. In stretcher cases, we used the Hun prisoners to carry them out, and believe me, it didn't take very long. They seemed to be very nice fellows and more or less glad to be in our hands. I tried to get some good souvenirs, but they hadn't anything worth taking; I took one fellow's medal ribbon.

You might pass the word along to my friends as you meet them, etc.
So long for the present,
BROTHER JIM.

GAVE HER A SHOWER

A pleasant time was spent on Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. W. J.
Cox, Hanover street, when about thirty intimate friends gathered, bearing many tokens of good will and best wishes for her daughter, Miss Reta Cox, in anticipation of a happy event to transpire in the near future. Taken completely by surprise, Miss Cox was showered with a variety of handsome and valuable presents, including china, silverware, cut glass and fancy work. A social hour was passed in games, music, refreshments, and the evening broke up amid the good cheer of givers and recipient alike.

DEER TO ROCKWOOD

The little young deer which jumped through the window in John Jackson's house in Leinster street yesterday morning has been taken to Rockwood park.
Chief Simpson made the necessary arrangements for the removal of the animal.
