

Burns and Becher. The following poem was written by a Scotchwoman, Mrs. Janet Wood, on the occasion of the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher being appointed to deliver an oration in New York at the celebration of the Burns Centennial, Jan. 25, 1859:

He bears the task he's to do, To give the laird's 'Arr his do; But see how well he does it, He keeps sweet charity in view, For he's a good man.

He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man; He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man.

He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man; He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man.

He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man; He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man.

He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man; He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man.

He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man; He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man.

He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man; He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man.

He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man; He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man.

He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man; He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man.

He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man; He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man.

He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man; He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man.

He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man; He's a very good man, he is, For he's a very good man.
