ATTEMPT TO KILL.

Serious Charge Made Against Carlin, King, Stone and Morrison.

The charge against John Carlin, Frederick King and Theodore Morrison, for assaulting Frederick G. Globe on Saturday evening last, has now taken on a most serious aspect and the men who are in custody are under the charge of attempting to murder.

King and Morrison were arrested on Saturday night, shortly after the trouble at Reed's Point occurred, and on Monday, on information given by Mr. Globe, a warrant was issued for the arrest of John Carlin, on the charge of assault. Yesterday afternoon Carlin was taken in charge by Officer Crawford.

In the meantime the police had received such information as went to show that the assault was much more serious than was at first supposed. Upon this information secured by the police, the magistrate felt justified in issuing a second warrant against the three men already in charge, and Samuel Stone, a fourth member of the gang, charging them with throwing Frederick G. Globe over the wharf with intent and there to drown him and thereby commit murder. Mr. Globe's reason for making the information upon which the warrant was issued was that he had been attacked by four men who forced him towards the end of the wharf and into the water.

This morning Stone was arrested by Detective Killen, and the four men were brought into court to answer the charge against them. J. B. M. Baxter appeared for Morrison, W. J. Mahoney for Stone, and E. S. Ritchie for Carlin. The prisoners all pleaded not guilty, and the trial this morning was made a preliminary examination.

Frederick G. Globe, the first witness, said that on Saturday evening he had gone to meet his family at the D. A. R. wharf. His family did not arrive, and as he was about to start for home he heard a sound of breaking glass, and turning saw four men at a house near by. Just then he was called by a little boy to see what was wrong with a man who was lying in the road. He went over in company with a man from the freight shed and lifted up the one who was on the ground. After he had raised the fellow up, three other young men surrounded Mr. Globe, and one of them, whom he now identifies as the prisoner Stone, threatened to smash him. Another interfered and prevented the blow, but Stone insisted and struck Mr. Globe over the right eye. Mr. Globe fell back from the force of the blow and on regaining his feet, Stone struck him. Mr. Globe endeavoring to get away he was struck on the head from behind and was prevented from getting away from the crowd. By this time Mr. Globe was dazed from the effects of the repeated blows. He was struck again from behind, and again from in front, and was hustled around considerably, being forced here and there while attempting to get away. He was hustled towards the end of the wharf and struck twice more on the back of the head. While backing up to get away and being pressed over the end of the wharf and being forced by the men who were pressing against him, fell into the water. The fourth blow on the back of the head was received just before he fell over the wharf. Mr. Globe is a baker, residing on Waterloo street.

After being pushed into the water Mr. Globe swam towards the steamer Yarmouth. He heard a man call to him from the wharf and swam back. A rope was thrown to him and after some trouble he succeeded in fastening it about his body and was drawn up. He was heavily dressed at the time. After getting ashore he got wounded and went home. None of his assailants were in sight.

Cross-examined by Mr. Mahoney, Mr. Globe identified Morrison as the one who had struck him from behind. The electric lights were quite near the scene of the affair, and he had no difficulty in seeing the men's faces.

Mr. Baxter cross-examined the witness and drew further details of the assault. Mr. Globe was sure that Morrison was the one who had struck him from behind and Stone as the one who had struck him in front, but could not identify Morrison as the one he had picked up on the road.

Grace Lawson, a little girl, was the second witness. She and her brother were going to the boat on Saturday evening and when near the wharf she saw Mr. Peterson and another man coming towards them. The other man staggered and fell at her feet, but she did not see Peterson strike him. Peterson came back to his shop and a girl, who had been in the door, closed it. Grace's brother then called to a man who was passing to come and see what was wrong with the one who had fallen. He came. It was Mr. Globe. He and young Lawson picked him up. Three men, who had run away from Peterson, came around the international freight shed and called pickets off the fence at Harding's lumber yard. They spoke to Mr. Globe, asking what business he had in picking up the man. They then surrounded him and one of them attempted to strike him. A light haired man intervened. The next thing the witness saw was Mr. Globe lying on the ground and the crowd beating him. He tried several times to get up, and when he did so, the man who had been picked up, came back to his back. Then they kept forcing Mr. Globe to the end of the wharf and when they got there they thought they threw him over. One man, at least, wearing a rubber coat and rubber boots, had hold of him. I believe they pushed Mr. Globe over. The four men then went away and I called out "Man overboard" several times, my brother doing the same. Men from the Yarmouth came over when they were pulling him up, my father came and said to go easy, but Mr. Globe told them to hurry or he could not hold on. Then the four men threw Mr. Globe over, came back smoking cigarettes, and asked what was the matter. I know Fred King was one of the four on Saturday night, and he was the one with the rubber coat and boots. I know Morrison as the one who fell on the road, and Carlin was the man who told Stone not to hit. Just when Mr. Globe was at the edge of the wharf I saw Morrison on his back, holding both his shoulders. One of the men said: "Don't throw him over." It was quite light on the wharf and I could see everything. I was not excited. Carlin was the one who tried both to prevent Stone from striking Mr. Globe and to keep the others from throwing him over the wharf.

John Lawson, the last witness examined this forenoon gave a general story of the affair, but as he had not been so near to the crowd as was his sister, was not sure of the details. He had, however, seen Morrison and King strike Mr. Globe. He knows the four prisoners. In the witness's opinion Mr. Globe fell over the wharf when trying to get up on his feet, and the men did not intentionally throw him over.

The hearing was adjourned until half past two o'clock this afternoon.

FOR LOADING CATTLE.

A Huge Barge Being Built to Take Them from Ballast Wharf to Sand Point.

There is now under construction at Carleton a mammoth barge, which is to be used in the transfer of cattle across the harbor from the Ballast wharf to the steamers at Sand Point. The advantages resulting from such procedure will be many.

During the first of the winter the cattle coming over the I. C. R. for shipment were all sent around to the C. P. R. cattle sheds at Sand Point, thus adding the heavy bridge tolls to the cost of transportation. Then the I. C. R. made accommodations for nearly a thousand head of cattle at the Ballast wharf, doing away with bridge charges on those, but making it necessary for the cattle steamers to undergo the expense of towage across the harbor, as most of them take in the greater part of their cargo at Sand Point.

Under this new system both these difficulties will be done away with. The barge now being built will have a capacity of three or four hundred head, and will be so constructed with huge double decks that the cattle may walk from the wharf into the barge and from the barge directly on board the steamers. The cost of the transfer of this barge across the harbor will be far less than either the transfer of the steamer or the bridge tolls. It will also make it possible for the steamer to load cattle at any time of tide, and will facilitate the transfer of other cargoes by making it possible for other goods to be loaded from the wharf while the cattle are coming aboard from the barge on the other side of the ship. Now it is necessary for the steamer to complete the rest of her cargo and then spend an extra day getting the cattle on board.

It is expected that the barge will be ready for use in a week or ten days. The man back of the scheme is John E. Moore, and it is stated that he has already made cattle loading contracts with the leading steamship companies.

POLICE COURT.

Too Many Arrests on Charge of Drunkenness.

Daniel Mullen appeared in court this morning on behalf of one Michael McDevitt, who was arrested on Saturday night by Sergt. Campbell for being drunk. Several witnesses were examined and it appeared that McDevitt when arrested was quite able to take care of himself and was within a block of his brother's house, in which he lived. Mr. Mullen asked that the case be dismissed and started to say things about Sergt. Campbell, but as that officer was not in court, the magistrate thought it best to leave out criticisms. He expressed the opinion that men who are unfortunately addicted to drink should not be sought for on the streets when they are going to their own homes, but should be allowed or even assisted to their homes. He discharged the prisoner.

John McCarthy, for being drunk on Britain street, was fined eight dollars or two months, and another man, for the same offence, forfeited a deposit of eight dollars.

GOODSPEED'S TRIAL.

Interest Will Probably Center About Legal Points—How the Case Will be Fought.

The trial of Fred Goodspeed, which begins Friday morning, is likely to be more interesting from a legal than a popular point of view.

He stands indicted in three counts—one as an accessory to the murder of William Doherty after the fact, and the others charging him with burglary of two different stores. The evidence against him on the first charge must be largely that which convicted Higgins and nothing of new interest can come out. It will be proved that he went to the park with Higgins and Doherty; that he was seen there with them; that he associated with Higgins after the murder, ran away with him and hid point blank on several occasions when questioned regarding his own and Higgins' movements. This is wholly outside of the prisoner's own admissions.

Facing this, the defence, while they must admit the force of most of the evidence, will probably fight the case largely on the legal definition of an accessory, denying that Goodspeed, as charged in the indictment, did feloniously assist Higgins to escape. The law draws nice distinctions between the mere concealing of a crime by silence and deliberate deception calculated to cover the criminal and assist him to escape, and keen arguments on these points are likely to be characteristic of the trial.

On the burglary counts, to which Goodspeed has not pleaded yet, the crown has against him his own admission, which, however, they will probably not use. The burglary of Phillips & Foley's place can be proved by Harry Alexander, who was an accomplice, and by boys to whom Goodspeed gave the candy the two had stolen. So far as is now known the only ones who could give damaging evidence against the prisoners regarding the Kennedy burglary are Higgins and Will Holm, both in Dorchester.

According to Goodspeed, Holm was the prime mover in this, and it is possible that he may be called again from Dorchester to give evidence as though his evidence was considered inadmissible regarding the character and credibility of Higgins as a witness, it could be allowed regarding a matter of fact as in the present instance.
