A Black Eog

The black bog of Kilbarron, in the County of Kildare, Ireland, lies five long miles from either railway or post office and is considered to be at the "back of beyant entirely."

There are three styles of dwellings in the black bog, says the Rosary Maga zine, houses, cottages and cabins. The houses are quaint, rambling edifices, owned by the farmer, who still hold to olden styles and ancient ways unmindful of the great modern note which is sweeping through Ireland to-day.

The cottages belong to the government and are rented to laborers at a very low rate; while the cabins are simply relics of the old regime, just clav huts roofed with straw. There are very few of the latter standing in Irelaud now.

The black bog is a dangerous place for nightly rambles, as it abounds in deep holes full of ink; water. But some warm summer evening after sun. et, when the fogs are rising all around, go down there all vou who are city tired, and find out how good that springy sod will feel to your cramped feet.

Try a short Marathon along these short pathways, you who are weary of

A Woman's War Record

N.B. She wrote on Oct. 16, 1909:
"I wish to express my gratitude that I am living to-day, saved from the grave by Father Morriscy's No. 10 (Lung Tonic). This time last year I had pleuro-pneumonia and bronchitis, and had been given up to die, and had my lungs tapped in the City Hospital, and never expected to walk again. I was continually getting to walk again; I was continually getting worse every day. I came home from the hospital, and everyone was watching fo me to die. I tried everything but there seemed to be no cure for me.

'I began taking Father Morrisey's No.
10, and the second day I could eat without pain. I used 22 bottles of No. 10, as I Percy Gillmor was in St. John for several days, returning home on Tuesday the Crimea and Mexico, and in the war neighbors by gaining so quickly. I feel of throat and lungs to a healthy condition, and tones up the whole system, giving here 3 or 4 months possibly more. The Senator and family are expected in about 2 or 3 months for the summer.
