

pacifist facade. We, Italo-Canadians, are happy to have made our modest contribution to the great cause for which Italy is striving in the world, for the triumph of true civilization, which can only be based upon a loftier sense of international justice.

While every day that passes adds a new victory to the glories of our army that from now on has no longer an enemy before it, but has only to overcome the rugged African terrain, we must intensify our efforts to destroy the social democratic enemy who seeks by every means to snatch from us the fruits of victory, this enemy who lurks everywhere, always trying to keep the people misinformed about the principles which bind Italians in firm union.

We must reveal to the foreigner the ideal beauty of the great task of civilization that Italy has undertaken at the cost of enormous sacrifice.

Courage Brothers! The great body of right-thinking people, of men of good will, will soon be with us even in Canada.
