One of Canada's distinguished men wrote in July 1906.

"We know that the teaching of Domestic Science is gradually gaining ground in modern methods. Clear sighted educators are convinced that household training adapted to the different conditions of life should have its place in the curriculum of studies.

The educational reformers of France, Germany. England and Belgium are giving to the above mentioned stu the first place in their schools.

We are pleased to know that Canada enters into the spirit of this movement."

So, in a recent address, spoke Father Beaudet, the founder of "l'Ecole Ménagère de Saint-Pascal."
