PROFESSIONAL THIEVES AND THE DETECTIVES. 441

to be drawn in about him ; and, on the night of March 23, 1876, at eleven o'clock, as Sheridan, alias Ralston, alias Stewart, was landing in New York city from the Pennsylvania ferry-boat, at the foot of Desbrosees Street, my son Robert slipped his arm through that of the criminal, and quietly said :

" Sheridan, I want you to come to the Church Street police station with me. I have a bench-warrant for your arrest."

He made no resistance, but seemed to give up all hope and courage at once.

As he was without money, the legal fight made for his liberty was not so bitter as had been anticipated, and in consideration of this, and the sympathy created on account of his rapidly failing health, and though he came into New York with eighty-two indictments hanging over his head, his trial and conviction only resulted in a sentence for five years in the penitentiary ; which, under the circumstances, will serve all the ends of justice, as undoubtedly before the expiration of that term he will pass from an infamous life to an infamous grave in the little cemetery just above Sing Sing.
