Is it True that

Wine Drinking Prolongs Life?

A great deal has been said of late about the effects of drinking upon the constitution, and the consensus of opinion seems to be that the effects for good or evil depends to a great extent upon the quantity of the goods we drink. It is therefore of the utmost importance that your tance that your

The quite weel the day, and mane the ure of the wound ye got last nicht."

"Hale and hearty, good dame," merrily grounded the King, "and how fares the city Marion?" and as he took the hand the blumbing madden he defity encircled a with his free arm and kinesd her as ally as if he had been an accepted lover, defined the with his free arm and kinesd her as ally as if he had been an accepted lover, defined the with his free arm and kinesd her as ally as if he had been an accepted lover, defined the winds which made her doubt hether the was a which made her doubt hether the was a practised hand at the shad of thing had fairling, the plant, didne, just her when I get hame."

"Then I'll has a pook to put the faathers, "charply returned Tibbie, who did not he man! ye displeased as her fundand, aybe the wound on his hand wasna the lay ane that Ballangeich earlied awe wi'm yestreen, and I may yet has him for son in-law."

Womsnilke, she had quickly read her wother's feelings, and in the crimeson.

aim yestreen, and I may yet has him for a son in-law."

Womanlike, she had quickly read her daughter's feelings, and in the orimson obesic and downoss eyes saw plainly that all that was tender had been attreed in her breas by the gallant stranger whe had breved so much for her eake. Noting the young girl's confusion, the King kindy led her round the room, speaking of the pictures and grand tapestries adorning the walls, and soon had her tremore calmed; but Tibble's eagle eve noted his every gesture, and its esemed to her that their courtly friend was as profoundly impressed with Marion's beauty and goodness as her daughter was with his own handsome face and brave heart.

"Od, it'll be something to be mother in law to a Lord," the cantisantly thought, "for then I'll he received at Court, and be driven about in a cosch like a lady of the land, and then dock will be gied I'm no ane o' these mithers that has aye their nebs in the dirk."

"Now, my good friend John," observed the King, as he returned once more to their side with Marion, "I have thought much since we parted of the fears you expressed about being turned out of your "Ay, was's me, it's owre certain noo," much since we paried of the fears you carpressed about being turned out of your farm.

"Ay, was's me, it's owre certain noo," interposed Jock, "for before we left this morning the Bhirra efficers were at Breehead serving me wi' notice to quit."

"Ha! say you so? Xour young laird in somewhat quick in his proceedings," remarked the King. "We must be equally so, and you must e'en accompany me to the presence chamber, and sell your story to the King himself."

"The King himsel? " oried Jock in dismay. "Lord blees me, sir, if I was beside him I wadna kes which end o' me was uppermost. Me speak to the King —that's clean oot o' the question. I couldas him I wadna kes which end o' me was though my life were on's."

"th, but that's like ye, ye muckle mortil," remarked Tibbie. "Aye standing in yer ain licht, and never thinking o'yer wife and dangther. Od, if I had the chance I wad speak to the King as fear-kesly as I wad to my ain fatther."

"Noily spoken, good dame," cried the King, "for I know from himself that the dearest wish of Ris Majesty is to be a father to his people. Forgel your fears, John, and ary to think that you are only addressing your own wife."

"My ain wife!" exclaimed John, with a pitying look. "Man, Ballangeloh, yourly no a marriet man, or ye wad ken that wife than to a King, I coan sell ye from experience that when their tires is up the less ye asy to them the better. Tak'ne before the King now—that would has nerved me."

up the less ye say to them the better. Tak' mer before the King now—that would has nerved me."

The King laughed heartily, and offering an arm each to Marion and Tibbie he led the way to the presence chamber, in which the brilliant assemblage of ladies and nobles fairly took away Jook's breath. As for Tibbie, she only raised her head a little higher, and trod the floor a little more haughtly to intimate to all of her sex present that she was their inferior in nothing, while Marion's blushes and downcast eyes were the best eff-set which her rare beauty could have had, and instantly attracted the admiring gaze of every gentleman present.

"Mercy on us, what a grand show?"
oried Jaok, holding back. "I'm a kind o'feared to gang in after a'; and hist i Ballangeich, which is the King? Hoo will I ken him?"

"Easily, quite easily, John," merrily answered the King. "He alone will remain uncovered—every bonnet but his will be off.

"Ye dinna say sae? Wait a meenis!
I'm shakin' a' owre,like a new born kitlin.
I really canna gaug among a' thae gentry!
Lord hely us! there's a stoth o' diamonds and calragorms and feathers I I think I'll awa'!"

"Nay, fear not," said the King speaking alud, possibly for the benefit of Birkhill, wiff stood back in ignominy and diagrace.

"Speak to the King freely, and let him hear and know the voice of truth. Lay your grievances faithrally before the or blame him not, for how should Kings redress those ills which flatterers hide or wicked men diagnice?"

"Pegs, than's arm, "Ral'angeleh

your grievances faithtuly before him or blame him not, for how should Kings redress those ills which fasterers hide or wicked men diagnies?"

"Fegs, that's true," said Joek, amid a deashly silence, "but, man Bal.'angeich, ye've grown awfu' Englified since lest night—I auppose it's Holyrood manners; but I like best to hear ye whangin' oot a gude swatch o' the mither tongue's been corrupted—nee man shall ever say that Jock Howieson Cespised a freend for his mis. fortunes, and gude kens yer heart is as truly Soottish as ony that every threebit with thate wa's."

"Thank you, John; I am really much obliged to you for your good opinion," said the King, leading off the laugh that ran round the room, and busying himself in finding a place near the throne for Marion and Tibbie. While he was thus engaged, Jock's eye fell on the throne, and after admiring it thoroughly he calmly seated himself in its roomy depths and then waveds a friendly hand to the King.

"Come on, Ballangeich; I'll mak' room room for ye here," he generously remark ed. "Awed, comin' in here's just like getting married—it kat's a lot o' courage to mak' the plunge, but ance ye're in it's very pleasant. Od, this is the maist comfortable chair I ever was in in my life. Tibbis ye mann gri ane lithe this for me for the afternooms. It's a queer place this though, for thece's only as chair is hale room. Sit doon, man, sit doon; ye're as welcome to it as if it were yer sin," and Jock tried to pull the King down to sit beside him, but James contented himself van fan land was a then way seemen well here. Well, man, do you see the King who wore his plumed bonnes, and then as himself, and finally said with freest glee.

"You have guessed aright, John," answered the courtly stranger. "I am your weet the courtly stranger." If am your weet the courtly stranger. "I am your Micro was not hannest."

"You have guessed aright, John," answered the courtly stranger. "I am your Micro was not hannest."

"You have guessed aright, John," answered the courtly stranger. "I am your King!"
"Mercy me! I'm a deid man!" cried Jock, springing from his seast en the throne, uncovering his head and throwing himself flas on his face before the King.
"And I'm a deid woman," cobsed Tibbic instantly imitating her husbend.

Marion said nothing, but her knees gave way under her, and she was about to sink to the floor also when the King drew her arm within his own and said—
"Nay, kneel not to me, for virtue in woman and bravery in man are higher than thrones. Rise, my good dame; my

"Your Majesty, I wad suner ree her wed to a comm." promptly answered Tibble.

"I hope your Majesty will consider my rank," humbly suggested Birkhil.

"Your rank, my Lord!" scathingly returned the King. "Rank vanishes at the touch of an action base or low. What makes you great? Your drees and gilded equipage? Give them to your cowering lave there," and he indicated the corpse like face of Sunon Gorb, "and he's an great as thou. No, my Lord; he alone is great who acts greatly. Where's your greatness, when his poor family refuse your alliance? My Lords and gentlemen, draw near—I crave your advice. What does that man deserve who, under the shadow of night, would basely robe a father of his child, and raise his hand against his Soversign's life?"

"Instant death!" cried all, foremost among them being Birkhill himself.

"My Lord, you have pronounced your own doom," gravely continued the King. "It was I who last high rescued that innocent maiden from your vidence, and here, my Lords, behold the dagger which he basely raised against my life."

"The villain! like weddie's owne gude for him," cried Tibble, shaking her fiss across at her humbled landlord.

"Eb, Birkhill," oried Jook, shaking his head, "was am I to see your faither's son turn cot suo a ne'er dae weel—aad your noble mither, her grey head will be brought with sorrow to the grave.

"Tour life! I grant in that you knew me not," sternly pursued James, "but on ondition that within one month you resign in faver of your noble mother the charters which concerns that you knew me not," sternly pursued James, "but on ondition that within one month you resign in faver of your noble mother the charters which concerns that we diagraced. Remove him from our presence, and for that work has and take him with the other two outthroats to the Canonget Jail, there to await the doom of the law."

Instantly Birkhill and Simon Gorb were seized and hurried forth.
