No War Without Sacks.

THEY ARE GREATLY IN DEMAND AT THE FRONT.

(By a Sack-Maker.)

Besides men, Lord Kitchener wants millions of sacks, and as quickly as he can get them. He will continue to want them, too, for as long as the war lasts.

Since August last, the British Government has ordered nearly 3,000,000 additional sacks for use in the Army and Navy.

No country could go to war without sacks, and the war could not continue for long if the supply of sacks gave out. They are as vital a necessity as powder and shot. Since the war started the Government has forbidden sack-makers to trade with neutral countries through which sacks might be sent to the enemy. Sacks are thus contraband of war.

I cannot say that I have made a fortune out of sacks since the war began, for my profit is on an average about a sixth of a penny on each sack, but my trade is booming, and I have nothing to grumble about. I can sell as many sacks to the Government as I can make; my difficulty is in making them quickly enough.

Business is Top-Notch.

There are between thirty and forty sack-makers in London, and business is good with all of us. The same is the case in Dundee, the home of the sack and bag trade.

I have said that wars could not be fought without sacks; I think the average person has not the slightest conception of the multitudinous uses to which sacks are put by the Army and Navy. In addition to this do you realize that there is scarcely a trade or profession—from old bottle and clothes merchants to veterinary surgeons—that does not make use of sacks for some purpose or another?

At the front sacks are used for carrying sugar, rice, flour, oats, bran, corn, coal for the field-kitchens—did you know they sent coal to the front?—and for making trenches and defence works.

Proper trenches cannot be made without sand-bags, as they are called, although they are really bags filled with earth, not with sand. Specially-made sacks, about eighteen inches wide by thirty-six inches long, are used for this purpose. Try and imagine the number of "sand-bags" that are now in use at the front.

Provisions and coal for the Navy are sent out to the Grand Fleet in sacks. When the sacks are emptied they are thrown into the sea, so there is a constant demand for sacks in the Navy.

Kit-Bags, Post-Bags and Bread-Bags.

Then there are kit-bags, post-bags, bread-bags—in each of which 100 loaves are carried from the camp kitchens to the men in the trenches—horses' nose-bags, tarpaulin sack buckets, baths, washing basins, beds. All these are sent to the front, in addition to all manner of sack-coverings, and other things of sack-making numerous to mention.

The sacks that are being supplied now to the Army and Navy are not of such good quality as before, because of lack of the material. They now have to be made of cheaper stuff.

At the time of the Boer War the Government ordered special sacks to be made that would carry 80 lb. of flour, oats, corn and so on. This sized sack is still in use because it has been found that 80 lb. is the most convenient weight for transport and can, if necessary, be carried by Tommy for long distances.

There is one complaint that we British sack-makers have against the Government. That is, that instead of ordering only from British firms (and there are plenty of us), many of the large orders have gone to foreign firms in Britain.

Then, too, they sometimes have a weird way of ordering their sacks, in the Army. Supposing, for instance, that the troops at Salisbury want a certain number of sacks. Instead of ordering them from a sack-maker, the authorities go to a local ironmonger.

The ironmonger has to come to us in the end and so the Army pays more for its sacks than it need do, and also wastes time.

Apart from the supplies to the Army and Navy, more business is done with the second-hand sacks than with new ones. Hundreds of thousands are bought every year from the Navy Victualling Yard, for instance.

The sack merchant contracts for their left-off food sacks, and then has them shaken and turned inside out. They are then sold again to carry all manner of things—chemicals, manure, glass-bottles—for I should think that nine trades and professions out of ten buy second-hand sacks.

For instance, the printer of Pearson's Weekly uses them for his yearly tons of waste paper. If you have a spare quarter of an hour try and think of a business that has no use for sacks. I doubt if you will find one.

HOW GERMANY IS OBTAINING COPPER FROM ITALY.

Milan, via Rome, March 2.—Notwithstanding rigid precautions taken by the authorities to prevent the re-exportation from Italy to belligerent nations of goods, classed as contraband of war, it has been discovered that large quantities of copper have been sent to Berlin, concealed in trucks loaded with cabbages. AUTO SALESMEN.

"I think," said Jones, "I'll buy a car." He lightly spoke, nor dreamed of ill; he lighted then his punk cigar, and teetered up the village hill. But ere he'd gone a half a block three smiling salesmen ran him down; each handed out his line of talk, each sold the finest car in town. One pulled him east, one pulled him west, to show him autos rich and gay; one grabbed him firmly by the vest, and dragged him up an alley-way. Then five more agents came in haste; they'd heard he wished to buy a car; he broke away, the salesmen chased him o'er the village, near and far. He reached his home and locked the door; outside, the salesmen raised their din; six climbed the roof and three or four slid down the coal-hole, to the bin. All day they talked, by fits and starts, all night they sat upon his bed, and spied away of chug-chug carts, until he wished that he was dead. All beaten, then, by jolt and jar, he feebly waved a flag of truce, and bought from each a motor car, and begged them all to seek the deuce.
