& Son. St. John's.

In proposing the toast of "Our Guests," Mr. George Dilnot said there was represented at the dinner every link in the chain of criminal justice except one—the common hangman was not present. He described Lord Darling as the greatest judge of our generation-indeed, of any generation. No one was more fitted to be a judge than a man with a sense of humor. He had once asked an old crook his opinion of the judicial bench. Well, guy'nor," said the man, "if I was innocent I would like to be tried by Darling, but if I was guilty I would like to be tried by-" (the chairman declined to fill in the name.) The chairman said that Lord Darling was the last person who ever had the courage to make a Greek quotation in the House of Commons.

Lord Darling, in replying, made it his first task to destroy the legend of the Greek quotation. "Sar from having quoted Greek in the House of Commons," he said, "I do not even know the Greek letters. I have never admired the Greeks. I think Lord Byron threw away his life in fighting for them, and I have always been of opinion that this country has got itself into no end of trouble in the east simply because Greek is a compulsory subject in public schools and universities. It has, therefore, misled a number of otherwise sensible persons, notably the late Mr. Gladstone, to involve this country in no end of obligations for the sake of the Greeks, all because they have read about Helen, and Menelaus, and Ulysses, who, to my mind, was a most disreputable person. (Laughter.) The consequence of this education is that we have fought all sorts of battles for the Greek-Navarino and many another. I should have kept clear if I had been called into the councils of the sovereign about the year 1827 when Navarino was fought. I have escaped this infection for the simple reason that I never went to the university because I had not been to school. Therefore, I do not see why the slander should be repeated that I quoted Greek. I would not have done so in the House of Commons; first, because I did not know it, and next because hardly anybody there in my time would have understood it, except Mr. Gladstone, whom I never attempted to gratify, and Mr. Asquith. But if I do not know the Greek letters I know what is more rare; I know English, and if I take the trouble I can write it. I wish more did." (Laughter.)

Lord Darling said no one would think of making him a judge again. Lord Halsbury was a here to do it, and they knew that those of the type of Agamemnon had ceased to exist. It had been said that a saintly person The attention of the Public is should not be a judge, but he did not called to the following Section of think the callings were incompatible. the St. John's Municipal Act, He had heard the word saint applied not long ago to a certain Mr. Das. He did not know him, but he had seen Section 138: The occupant of quite lately that some of his intimate particular saint being made a judge those who deserved it as they thought in passing sentence to please everybody." TO RELIEVING OFFICERS, STIPENDIARY MAGIS. TRATES, AND OTHERS:-

The expenditure of public money upon hospitals and similar charitable institutions, the care of outside patients, and transportation to and fro has grown to alarming proportions. Disregard of instructions as to the sending of patients to St. John's from the Outports has not only increased the expenditure, but has caused inconvenience to the authorities, and unnecessary suffering for the ailing. Room in the hospitals has not, at times, been available for patients arriving here, and it has been found necessary to send to boardinghouses, to await their turn for entering a hospital, many who would have been better cared for at home during the period of waiting. These and other considerations have made it advisable to state the facts. and to repeat and add to instructions.

It is the policy of the Legislature and Government to limit, as closely as possible, the expenditure of public money in the case of the sick in public hospitals, and their transportation to and fro, to provision for those patients only who are unable to pay for their own care, and whose natural protectors are unable to pay for them. The aid given is a charity for the sick and helpless, and it should only be accepted consistently with self-respect. Those who are able to pay in whole or in part for their own treatment are expected to do so. Parents are expected to pay for the care of children, and children for the care of parents, wholly or partly, where they are able to do so.

Only Relieving Officers, or Stipendiary Magistrates, acting in lieu of such Officers, have authority to send patients, at the expense of the Colony, for treatment in the public wards of hospitals.

Where a Relieving Officer resides conveniently near, he alone has authority.

Where by reason of the remoteness of a Relieving Officer, and the nature of the malady, delay until such Officer could act would seem to a Stipendiary Magistrate to be undesirable, such Magistrate may act in lieu of a Relieving Officer, but Magistrates are requested to observe as far as possible the rule that dealing with the sick at public expense is specially the province of Relieving Officers.

Clergymen and others whose attention is drawn to persons asking treatment at public expense are requested to refer such patients to Relieving Officers or Magistrates in their order (wherever such reference can be made without danger to the sick), and to refer to Mr. Bartlett only in instances in which no Relieving Officer or Magistrate is near enough to deal with the matter adequately.

It is desired that the discretion of sending forward patients shall be exercised wherever convenient by Relieving Officers and Magistrates only, in the order named, except as provided in the next following para-

Except in "Emergency cases," as herein defined, no patient may be forwarded by Relieving Officers, Magistrates or others, at public expense, unless permission has been first asked and obtained of Mr. Lewis Bartlett, Public Health Officer, St. John's. Patients suffering from serious accidents, or from appendicitis, or whose condition requires immediate surgical attention, may be forwarded without the prior consent of Mr. Bartlett, but he must be immediately notified by telegram of the coming of the patient, and of the ailment thereof. Every such instance will be strictly inquired into, and unless the condition of the patient made the forwarding thereof without prior permission reasonably necessary, the person forwarding will be considered to have acted without discretion, and be held liable to pay the cost incurred.

When application is made to forward a patient for hospital treatment, a Relieving Officer, or Stipendiary Magistrate, as the case may be, should, before complying, satisfy himself that the patient, or the person liable for the care of the patient, is not able to pay the expense of treatment, and that such expense should be a charge upon the Colony, and if it seems to such Relieving Officer or Magistrate that the financial and physical conditions of the patient call for treatment at public expense, a Doctor, where one is conveniently near, should be asked to examine and report whether hospital or other treatment is necessary or expedient. The certificate of the Relieving Officer, or Magistrate, as the case may be, that the case is one for treatment at public expense, and the report, if any, of the Doctor upon the patient's condition, should be forwarded to Mr. Bartlett, with application for permission to forward the patient. When it seems desirable to telegraph for Mr. Bartlett's permission, the telegram should indicate the effect of the Doctor's report. If a Doctor is not conveniently near, the Relieving Officer or Magistrate, or other person intervening on behalf of the patient, should state to Mr. Bartlett as fully as possible the nature of the ailment complained of.

These regulations have, of course, nothing whatever to do with transportation or treatment in hospitals of patients the charges for whom will be paid by them or their friends. But in respect of such patients, as the hospitals are frequently overcrowded, application to Mr. Bartlett to ascertain if a bed can be obtained, will be promptly replied to.
