"Vegetarians who have before the adopting of that regimen been moderate drinkers and smokers often lose wholly or in part the taste for alcohelic beverages or tobacco. If, therefore, the craving for narcotics attributed to rice-eating races have a dietetic origin, it is presumably due rather to the introgenous factor than to the vegetable origin of their food."

There, at all events, it was that the Amazons figured.

The British Medical Journal takes up the thread of the argument at this point and says: "There is here indicated a field of research which dietetic reformers might well explore, if only by way of varying the monotony of incessant reiteration of the superiority in 'food value' of lentils and haricot beans over beefsteaks and mutton chops.
