The evening service is commenced by the singing of a song by the chanter choir, which is considered the most sacred prayer in all Jewish services, and called the "Kol Nidre."

little visiting is done, the members of steps leading to the embassy each family always making it a point, when possible, to dine together. Thousands of chickens were slaughtered to make up tonight's repast. Fish is also in great demand as one of the courses. Mother's Right.

In each Jewish home last evening candles could be seen burning, as on Friday night, though in this case the rule is more rigidly observed, and the candles are of the long kind that burn for 24 hours. These are lighted by the wife and mother of the household, who murmurs a brief prayer over each. Lighting candle has always been the privilege and right of Jewish womanhood, symbolical of her rule in the home, and herself as the light of
