The young woman is not dull, nor stupid. On the contrary, she is incompany she sits up serenely silent and lets people talk at her instead of with her, and when he and she are alone together he is forced to do monologue until his whole conversational repertoire is exhausted.

And he wishes to know what sort of wife this clamlike lady will make.

Well, for one thing, she would be a most unusual one, son. Something rare, and unique, and recherche in wives that will cause many another man to envy you. For the thing that most men object to in the women to whom they are united in the holy bonds of matrimony is not that they talk too little but that they talk too much and too continu-
