

Petrified Trees in Texas.—A Texas paper gives an account of petrified trees which are found in some parts of that country. They are to be found scattered in huge logs or blocks, or in small detached masses over a large extent of country, generally at the distance of eighty or a hundred miles from the coast. On the largest of these specimens is said to be seven feet in diameter. It is completely silicified, throughout, and so hard that the chips readily strike fire with steel. The fibres of the wood are so distinct, that the rings denoting the annual growth may be distinguished. All the specimens that have been found belong to one species of tree—probably different from any now existing on the globe. It resembles the pine more than any other trees.

In many parts of the west, particularly in Kentucky, petrification may be seen at every step. They are not in such large masses as those spoken of above—but mostly consist of shells imbedded in stone, with twigs and other ligneous particles. The manner in which these formations took place is a matter of speculation. The existence of marine shells so far in the interior is the strangest part of the phenomenon.

Our Opinion too.—The following from the Picayune proves the editor to be a gentleman of taste:—"If a man was made in the image of his maker, surely woman was designed to keep him still in remembrance of heaven. When a man reflects upon Paradise, asks his mind for something earthly that resembles it, he can think of woman, lovely woman, and nothing else. Picture innocence, youth and beauty in woman, and if you do not see paradise, go to an oculist immediately, depend upon it, there is something the matter with your eyes."
