

Business of the House has taken much of their time. This might explain the poor results and the lack of action, on the part of the government, in dealing with the serious problems we now have before us, such as unemployment and the slump in which agriculture finds itself.

(Text):

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Before you leave the chair, perhaps I could persuade the leader of the house to let us know whether this debate will be carried on until a conclusion, according to the rules.

Mr. Churchill: This debate will be carried on until its conclusion, which, of course, could occur at any time. The house is not obliged to keep this debate going for eight days. We shall continue this debate tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the other two days if necessary?

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.
