

That evening, I know that you and Mrs. Massey are dining with the Greenshields, and I have thought that Salter would best appreciate a quiet meal at my house. I know that if I must make a speech, comparatively long, I do not care for a dinner party immediately preceding it. I might have Grant to dine with us, if he is available.

Now, as to the Windsor Hall. I should think that Salter will take quite an hour. I shall introduce him, and the broadcasting people are anxious that all the time be made available for him, if he needs it. I shall have to begin my introduction five or ten minutes before nine o'clock and time it so that I shall finish about one minute after nine. I would like very much to have you come on the platform with me. The platform party will then consist of Sir Arthur Salter, yourself and myself. When he finishes, will you thank him on behalf of the audience?

Can you tell me definitely what is Salter's main preoccupation at the present time?

Have you any suggestions to make?

Ever yours faithfully,

Principal
