Canada's Modern

Departmental Store

DIRECTORS-H. H. Fudger, J. W. Flavelle, A. E. Ames.

This store has poor facilities for selling old goods. It is, perhaps, the best lighted large store in Canada "from turret to foundation stone," and if we had not much better reasons, this one alone would be your guarantee that only substantial goods would be offered for your inspection. We shall not parade common honesty as our motive. If you credit us with that we shall not feel greatly flattered, but shall not resent it, and we shall do little verbally to protest that we possess it. We rather choose to point you to the goods them-selves "and let them speak," as Cæsar's vestments were made to speak when shown the Roman audience by Antony. No, honesty we shall leave to be paraded by those who wish to cover mediocrity by its charitable but threadbare folds, and we shall ask you only to credit us, as plain business men, with enough acumen to realize that to be permanently successful we must always furnish you with the best articles of every nature which our close knowledge of modern shopkeeping will enable us to gather. For this purpose we draw upon the markets of the world, no one of which is closed to our alert buyers, for each section of the store. "The Reyal Box" at the Grand.

A most remarkable transformation in make-up on the stage is shown by Mr. Albert Bruning in the part of Count Felsen, the Swedish Ambassador, in Charles Coghlan's new romantic play, "The Royal Box," which has made a most successful run of two months in New York to phenomenal receipts. Mr. Bruning is a young actor of great promise. He makes up as a suave, well-balanced diplomat of 50 years of age, completely changing bis personality so effectually that even his friends would be recognize him, did they not know the part he plays. He impersonates the character with all the grace and dignity of a courtly gentleman of 100 years ago, an ability which few young actors of to-lay display. The box office opens Friday morning for Mr. Coghlan's engagement at the Grand.
