While grey, faded hair is not sinful, we all deshre to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all grey hairs have "isappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger.

Elmer Horton, who had worked in her old office, came to see her; and before she realized what she was doing in his quiet way he had drawn from her some of her fears and doubts. She choked an instinctive desire to hug him. "You old dear, how faithful and kind you have been to me; and you know I never can love you."

"Perhaps," he answered, smiling at her mood.

"Ah, I wonder!" Then her smile twisted a bit. "Well, I must have it done; but the money end of it—I'm poor as Job's turkey—was it Job's turkey? Hold on!" Her chin was quivering, but her eyes were smiling. "I have one thousand dollars, after all. Did you know that?"

He confessed great astonishment. "Someone did love me enough to give me one thousand dollars." She hunted through an old wallet that evidently contained cherished treasures, and drew out a crumpled check. "You remember old Mr. Pruit?"

"Do I? He used to sit and ramble on by the hour with you while I was only asking for five minutes to make love to you."

She shook her head warningly. "None of that. Well, I did try to be good to by the shook her head warningly. "None of that. Well, I did try to be good to by the shook her head warningly. THE BARKER LUCK.
By A. W. Peach.

Rose Barker faced the issue bravely as she had faced other difficult problems in days past. Without any particular ability except willingness to work hard, she had won her way into the goodwill of the great real estate firm, and was about to enter on the new duties of the position, when the grave but kindly-faced physician had told her the cause of harassing pain in her side, and ended with a statement that involved the word "operation."

The Advertiser's

Latello At his last boyish question, she ladd her face against his shoulder and drew his arm about her. "Hate you, 'my dear, great-hearted boy," She said gently; "why, let me tell you what I have been learning these weeks—I love you!"

"Rose Bee!"

A hoarse cough broke the spell. Mr. Stafford stood in the doorway. "Say, if you young folks will forgive me, I want to tell you something. I talked with Horton, and he told me the story of that check. I'm a curious old cuss, and just for the fun of it, 'cause I could understand how Pruit loved this girl—I guess you do, too, Horton—I had my bankers telephone to that country bank the check was on, while I was in the city; and I just got home and I had to give you the news—that check just covers the balance old Pruit had in his country bank! Elmer should have tried to cash it, but I guess everything is all right now!"

Elmer looked at Rose Bee, and Rose Bee looked at Elmer, in the immemoral speech of heart to heart; and then, as she kissed him, she announced, smilling through the mist in her eyes:

"Dear, the Barker luck has busted!"

To Do With the High Cost of Living

You have a right to get a full dollar's worth when you purchase home furnishings with your hard-earned savings. Nevertheless, thousands of dollars are annually taken deliberately away from the public by installment furniture stores. The so-called club plans, etc., stores are only the camouflage for extracting another $5.00 or $10.00 out of the purchaser. Not only do they charge you 20 to 30 per cent more than the article is worth (because you must help pay for those who do not), but the dealer is obliged to resell you those goods which he has seized from the poor unfortunate who cou'd not keep up the payments.

Much enthusiasm was shown, and victory at the next elections was confidently predicted.
