Hamilton, May 27.—Harry Reese, who was charged with non-support of his wife and family in police court today, endeavored to excuse himself on the ground that he was on strike. In dismissing the case, Magistrate Jelfs told Reese that because a man might be out on strike was no legal excuse for not providing his wife and family with support. If it came to a point of law, men who went out on strike, and would not work at other things when there was work for them to do, might be prosecuted under the vagrancy act, he added later. If a man were to be absolved from the duties of supporting his wife when he was on strike, families might starve while the wage-arner was weiting for his job to adjust itself to his demands.
