which the Commission seeks.

At intervals for many years the subject of technical education has been discussed by the St. John Board of Trade, and by its representatives at meetings of the of technical education has both discusses by the St. John Board of Trade, and by its representatives at meetings of the Maritime Board.—The great need of better facilities for technical training in the province has been clearly recognised by a few, and the general proposition has received the tacti assent of the many; but no practical steps have been taken to bridge the gap between the ordinary public schools and the practical work of a skilled handicraftsman,

This Commission has been appointed by the federal government. It cannot be copeted that the federal authorities will take up the task of providing for technical creaming sin will clear the way for intelligent action on the part of provincial and manicipal bodies.

His important that all interests be fairly represented at the meetings of the Commission in this city. The members are men specially qualified for the work in hand. The chairman is especially was the manufacturer puts up his please for insight province, which in common with the other provinces overs much this labors in connection with agriculture and the great darrying industry.

And yet Mr. Carleton had been vindicated by the results of the examination of the pavement on Tuesday. Why should he be treated as if he were a witness being examined by the opposing counsel, who sought to discredit his evidence?

The only answer to this question would appear to be that it is the aldermen themselves who are on trial before the bar of public opinion, and they do not propose to condemn their own administration.

Mr. Carleton says the foundation of the pavement is defective. He has proved his

Mr. Carleton says the foundation of the pavement is defective. He has proved his assertion in one instance, in the only spot where he was permitted to lay it bare. Great emphasis is laid by the examining committee upon an effort to show that Mr. Carleton did not do his duty as an inspector. His answer is conclusive. When he was told by the engineer to accept the Hassam method his duties really ceased, for he had no means of knowing what the Hassam method required. He only knew that a defective foundation was being laid with the engineer's approval, and he re-that a defective foundation was being laid with the engineer's approval, and he resigned.

It may be that very little will come of this enquiry, after all. The city council does not want to investigate its own administration if that can be avoided. Loud professions and denunciations are one thing; but confession of weakness and failure is quite another and less agreeable task.

The lesson for the citizens is obvious. They should insist upon a thorough resigned.

Edward J. Payson of Glen Ridge, N. J. was driving down Clark street when a big tree branch fell on his horse, barely missing the carriage against a stone trestle abutment and hurling Payson across the railroad track. He was congratulating himself on his two escapes when an expression of weakness and failure it in dashed toward him. He managed to get to the end of the trestle just as the train whizzed by. This all happened with the largest in the school, and on the snow-packed coasting ground He followed out the golden rule.

Ned drives a grocer's waggon now, Bruce lies among the quiet dead, John works and sings and taps old shoes, And Jim paints houses for his bread. Tom went to congress once or twice, He knew how sall the laws should be; But Joe he was the bravest one For he, oh yes, he married me.

The lesson for the crizens is obvious. They should insist upon a thorough representation of the civic departments, and this is not begun in real earnest, and the and his wife find great amusement in sending and receiving messages. For restance, they should take steps to change ceivers they use anything handy, a completely at the first opportunity the washbowl, a dishpan, a wire cot or without system of city government.

In the meantime public interest will horseradish contains a higher percentage. In the meantime public interest will sentre on this enquiry, to learn whether of Carleton is still to be made a scape oat, or whether the probing process is be genuine and effective.

ALLAN GUNDRY DIAMONDS 68 Prince Wm. RING

A planter of Spartanburg, S. C., substituted dynamite for the plow in the tilling of clay land. The cartridges were planted three feet apart in rows, and at a depth of four feet. The holes were made by driving crowbars to the desired depth. The dynamite was exploded by a line of men, provided with hot irons. The line went rapidly down the field, the explosions following the men in a steady roar that was deafening. The exploisons threw clouds of soil 30 feet into the air and covered the men from head to foot with dust and dirt.
