la years, has worked out that many springs, and has gone through the motions so often that it's an old story to him and everybody else.

But then you notice that he is wearing a different uniform, one with the words. St. Louis's on, of course.

Which is, a vital point when it is pointed out that—
When he joined the Athletics as a rockie and donned their uniform they won two pennants. That was in 1913—1914.

Four years later, 1918, he changed to a Red Sox uniform and they won a genant. Then, in 1921 he moved over to New York and that team proceeded to win three pennants in a row.
Now, of course, this might have been a coincidence in the first case. It might be ranked as a bit unusual in the second instance. But explain the third one.
Now we have him wearing the dandy near the second instance. But explain the third one.

Both teams were composed largely of heavy men and the play was fast and strenuous, making a most exciting contest for the spectators. The attendance was large. The game was played in the Agricultural Hall.
