Investment News
Halifax, August 12th, 1913.

An Investment Market Has Arrived.

When you carefully examine the prices quoted in our August "Investment Offerings" (now ready for mailing) we think that you will realize the force of our contention that this IS a very good time to buy.

Municipal Debentures especially are listed on an attractive price basis—thirteen of the highest class being offered at yields varying up to 5¼ p. c.

Ten representative Industrial and Public Service Bonds are included, yielding up to 6.76 p. c. Eleven stocks of prosperous industrial and public service corporations are listed with yields as high as 7 p. c.—two with bonuses of common stock.

Competent judges of present-day financial conditions express the opinion in the leading journals that "an investment market has arrived." They accordingly advise the man with surplus funds to buy NOW. We concur completely with such sound advice.

A Safe Investment.

ONE of the safest investments of to-day is to place your spare cash in building lots. It will in a short time yield for you a large return. No fear of land depreciating in value. Purchase a lot as an investment—if you do not want it for yourself, secure one for your wife or children as a sensible present, and watch it grow in value. Do not buy it for cash, pay for it by instalments. The easy payments you will never miss. Call and see us, and we will explain the plan more fully.

The Port of Missing Men

Chapter XVII

A GENTLEMAN IN HIDING.

MRS. CLAIBORNE excused herself shortly, and Shirley, her father and the ambassador talked to the accompaniment of the shower that drove in great sheets against the house. Shirley was wholly uncomfortable over the turn of affairs. The ambassador would not leave until the storm abated, and meanwhile Armitage must remain where he was. If by any chance he should be discovered in the house, no ordinary excuses would explain away his presence, and as she pondered the matter it was Armitage's plight, his injuries and the dangers that beset him, that was uppermost in her mind. The embarrassment that lay in the affair for herself if Armitage should be found concealed in the house troubled her little. Her heart beat wildly as she realized this, and the look in his eyes and the quick pain that twitched his face at the door haunted her.

The two men were talking of the new order of things in Vienna.

"The trouble is," said the ambassador, "that Austria-Hungary is not a nation, but what Metternich called Italy—a geographical expression. Where there are so many loose ends a strong grasp is necessary to hold them together."

"And a weak hand," suggested Judge Claiborne, "might easily lose or scatter them."

"Precisely. And a man of character and spirit could topple down the card-house tomorrow, pick out what he liked and create for himself a new edifice—and a stronger one. I speak frankly. Van Stroebel is out of the way, the new emperor-king is a weakling, and if he should die tonight or tomorrow"—

The ambassador lifted his hands and snapped his fingers.

"Yes. After him, what?"

"After him his scoundrelly cousin Francis, and then a stronger than Von Stroebel might easily fall to hold the disjecta membra of the empire together."

"But there are shadows on the screen," remarked Judge Claiborne. "There was Karl, the mad prince."

"Humph! There was some red blood in him, but he was impossible. He had a taint of democracy, treason, rebellion."

Judge Claiborne laughed.

"I don't like the combination of terms. If treason and rebellion are synonyms of democracy, we Americans are in danger."

"No; you are a miracle—that is the only explanation," replied Marbot.

"But a man like Karl—what if he were to reappear in the world! A little democracy might solve your problem."

"No, thank God, he is out of the way! He was sane enough to take himself off and die."

"But his ghost walks. Not a year ago we heard of him, and he had a son who chose his father's exile. What if Charles Louis, who is without heirs, should die and Karl or his son"—

"In the providence of God they are dead. Impostors gain a little brief notoriety by pretending to be the lost Karl or his son Frederick Augustus, but Von Stroebel satisfied himself that Karl was dead. I am quite sure of it. You know dear Stroebel had a genius for gaining information."

"I have heard as much," and Shirley and the baron smiled at Judge Claiborne's tone.

The storm was diminishing, and Shirley grew more tranquil. Soon the ambassador would leave and she would send Armitage away, but the mention of Stroebel's name rang oddly in her ears, and the curious way in which Armitage and Chauvenet had come into her life awoke new and anxious questions.

"Count von Stroebel was not a democrat, at any rate," she said. "He believed in the divine right and all that."

"So do I, Miss Claiborne. It's all we've got to stand on."

"But suppose a democratic prince were to fall heir to one of the European thrones, insist on giving his crown to the poor and taking his oath in a frock coat, upsetting the old order entirely"—

"He would be a fool, and the people would drag him to the block in a week," declared the baron vigorously.

They pursued the subject in lighter vein a few minutes longer; then the baron rose. Judge Claiborne summoned the waiting carriage from the stable, and the baron drove home.

"I ought to work for an hour on that Danish claims matter," remarked the judge, glancing toward his curtained den.

"You will do nothing of the kind. Night work is not permitted in the valley."

"Thank you. I hoped you would say that, Shirley. I believe I am tired, and now if you will find a magazine for me I'll go to bed. Ring for Thomas to close the house."

"I have a few notes to write. They'll take only a minute, and I'll write them here."

She heard her father's door close, listened to be quite sure that the house was quiet and threw back the curtains. Armitage stepped out into the library.

"You must go! You must go!" she whispered, with deep tensity.

"Yes; I must go. You have been kind. You are most generous."

But she went before him to the hall, waited, listened, for one instant; then threw open the outer door and bade him go. The rain dripped heavily from the eaves, and the cool breath of the freshened air was sweet and stimulating. She was immediately relieved to have him out of the house, but he lingered on the veranda, staring helplessly about.

"I shall go home," he said, but so unsteadily that she looked at him quickly. He carried the cloak flung over his shoulder and in readjusting it dropped it to the floor, and she saw in the light of the door lamps that his arm hung limp at his side and the gray cloth of his sleeve was heavy and dark with blood. With a quick gesture she stooped and picked up the cloak.

"Come, come! This is all very dreadful. You must go to a physician at once."

"My man and horse are waiting for me. The injury is nothing." But she threw the cloak over his shoulders and led the way across the veranda and out upon the walk.

"I do not need the doctor; not now. My man will care for me."

He started through the dark toward the outer wall, as though confused, and she went before him toward the side entrance. He was aware of her quick light step, of the soft rustle of her skirts, of a wish to send her back, which his tongue could not voice, but he knew that it was sweet to follow her leading. At the gate he took his bearings with a new assurance and strength.

"It seems that I always appear to you in some miserable fashion. It is preposterous for me to ask forgiveness. To thank you"—

"Please say nothing at all, but go. Your enemies must not find you here again. You must leave the valley."

"I have a work to do. But it must not touch your life. Your happiness is too much, too sweet to me."

"You must leave the bungalow. I found out today where you are staying. There is a new danger there. The mountain people think you are a revenue officer. I told one of them"—

"Yes?"

"—that you are not. That is enough. Now hurry away. You must find your horse and go."

He bent and kissed her hand.

"You trust me. That is the dearest thing in the world." His voice faltered and broke in a sob, for he was worn and weak, and the mystery of the night and the dark, silent garden wove a spell upon him, and his heart leaped at the touch of his lips upon her fingers. Their figures were only

"Do not let them hurt you again," she said.

blurs in the dark, and their low tones died instantly, muffled by the night. She opened the gate as he began to promise not to appear before her again in any way to bring her trouble, but her low whisper arrested him.

"Do not let them hurt you again," she said, and he felt her hand seek his, felt its cool, furtive pressure for a moment, and then she was gone. He heard the house door close a moment later and, gazing across the garden, saw the lights on the veranda flash out.

Then, with a smile on his face, he strode away to find Oscar and the horses.

Chapter XVIII

AN EXCHANGE OF MESSAGES.

"WHO am I?" asked John Armitage soberly.

He tossed the stick of a match into the fireplace, where a pine knot smoldered; drew his pipe into a glow and watched Oscar screw the top on a box of ointment which he had applied to Armitage's arm. The little soldier turned and stood sharply at attention.

"You are Mr. John Armitage, sir. A man's name is what he says it is. It is the rule of the country."

"Thank you, Oscar. Your words reassure me. There have been times lately when I have been in doubt myself. You are a pretty good doctor."

"First aid to the injured. I learned the trick from a hospital steward. If you are not poisoned and do not die you will recover—yes?"

"Thank you, sergeant. You are a consoling spirit, but I assure you on my honor as a gentleman that if I die I shall certainly haunt you. This is the fourth day. Tomorrow I shall throw away the bandage and be quite ready for more trouble."

"It would be better on the fifth."

"The matter is settled. You will now go for the mail, and do take care that no one pots you on the way. Your death would be a positive loss to me, Oscar. And if any one asks how my majesty is—mark, my majesty—pray say that I am quite well and equal to ruling over many kingdoms."

"Yes, sire."

And Armitage roared with laughter as the little man, pausing as he buckled a cartridge belt under his coat, bowed, with a fine mockery of reverence.

"If a man were king he could have a devilish fine time of it, Oscar."

"He could review many troops, and they would fire salutes until the powder cost much money."

"You are mighty right, as we say in Montana, and I'll tell you quite confidentially, sergeant, that if I were out of work and money and needed a job the thought of being king might tempt me. These gentlemen who are trying to stick knives into me think highly of my chances. They may force me into the business." And Armitage rose and kicked the flaring knot.

Oscar drew on his gauntlet with a jerk.

"They killed the great prime minister—yes?"

"They undoubtedly did, Oscar."

"He was a good man; he was a very great man," said Oscar slowly and went quickly out and closed the door softly after him.

The life of the two men in the bungalow was established in a definite routine. Oscar was drilled in habits of observation and attention, and he realized without being told that some serious business was afoot. He knew that Armitage's life had been attempted and that the receipt and dispatch of telegrams was a part of whatever errand had brought his master to the Virginia hills. His occupations were wholly to his liking; there was simple food to eat; there were horses to tend, and his errands abroad were of the nature of scouting and in keeping with one's dignity who had been a soldier. He rose often at night to look abroad, and sometimes he found Armitage walking the veranda or returning from a tramp through the wood. Armitage spent much time studying papers, and once, the day after Armitage submitted his wounded arm to Oscar's care, he had seemed upon the verge of a confidence.

"To save life, to prevent disaster, to do a little good in the world, to do something for Austria—such things are to the soul's credit, Oscar." And then Armitage's mood changed, and he had begun chaffing in a fashion that was beyond Oscar's comprehension.

The little soldier rode over the hills to Lamar station in the waning spring twilight, asked at the telegraph office for messages, stuffed Armitage's mail into his pockets at the postoffice and turned home as the moonlight poured down the slopes and flooded the valleys.

THE HARVEST MOON.

The last tall sheaf hath yielded to the blade,
Soft falls the dusk-cloak of the autumn night;
Along the upland and within the glade
The wheat-stooks shimmer 'neath the waning light.

Gods' curfew-bell, the bittern's plaintive cry,
Re-echoes: all is still, and Nature sleeps;
While, lo, from out its watch tower in the sky
A disc of ruddy gold night-vigil keeps.

THE FELLOW THAT MAKES US LAUGH.

We crown the great artists with laurel
And sing to them paeans of praise;
We banquet the makers of cities
And lift them to fame in our lays.
But I want to send my wreath of roses
To the fellow that makes us laugh!

You know how it is who have labored,
And worried and fretted, all day,
To meet with, in person or paper,
The fellow who laughs it away;
Who takes us when least we expect it
And turns us from sorrow to cheer,
With a twist of his thoughts that's so funny,
Our troubles at once disappear.

I tell you, he's worth all the ages
Can give him of praise and of love
Who has helped us to look out of trouble
To the peace of the blue skies above,
And to feel that no matter what happens
We'll do all we can to go on
With our hope and our faith on the promise
Of a better day surely to dawn.

He may not put pence in our purses,
Nor help us grow wealthy and grand,
But he teaches us all our reverses
Are lessons to help us to stand
In the face of the blight and the battle
And go forth again to the fray
With a spirit of sunshine and laughter
That will chase every trouble away.

Oh, here's to the king and the captain,
And here's to the soldier in line;
And here's to the man in the paper—
I think I can see his eyes shine—
The actor, the artist, the genius,
Whoever he is, with his chaff—
I want to send my wreath of roses
To the fellow that makes us laugh!
