forts at Galatz fully covered the cavalry, and the gunners stood ready to serve their pieces at a signal from the Cossacks. So far as can be learned, the building of the bridge at Galatz partook of the nature of a feint, because the great body of troops ossed into the Debrudscha at Ibrail.

Meanwhile the same moveme been made at Ibrail. The barges at this place were not so large as at Galatz, and many valuable Cossack ponies either fell or leaped from them into the river, but they were mostly saved by being lassoed less be held, eminent men will place them and thus towed to the shore. A JUNCTION EFFECTET In less than two hours the two lines of horsemen had formed a junction, the distance between Galatz and Ibail, measured on the inside of the bend in the river, being only eighteen miles. Thus was formed a cordon of Cossacks between the river's bank and the enemy.

The prominent part which the Cossack was thus made to play in the first real aggressive movement in the enemy's terri tory in Europe is worth noticing. It fully justifies all that has been written about horseman, is likely to render to Russia in the war. This brings the Cossack squarely to the front and makes of him what the Uhlan was to the troops of Prussia, "Pec-

COSSACKS GUARDING THE WORKERS Under cover of this Cossack cordon the the bridges at the two points were soon laid, every plank being ready and every man having a particular service to perform. The Galatz bridge was much more easily built than the one at Ibrail, because at the latter place, on the Debrud-scha side, the long stretch of swamp land before referred to had to be planked for the passage of the artillery. The foot soldiers did not wait for this event, how-

The batteries on these hills. OPENED ON THE INVADING RUSSIAN TROOPS, and a strong detachment of irregulars sallied out to meet their inveterate foes the Cossacks. They did not risk a hand encounter, however, and a few shells from the Russian battery posted on the opposite bank dispersed the Bashi-Bazouks and caused their inglorious retreat under cover of the batteries on the hills. Without de lay the Russians were ordered to advance and charge the batteries. After

Turks. Thus favorably opened the armed occupation of the Debrudscha. The second assault followed as soon a the men could be re-formed, and, with the aid of the newly acquired field pieces, the heights were carried by storm. These most desperate struggles, in which the fighting was in many instances hand to hand, continued until late in the after-fall of Friday settled down over the hills and valleys, and the victorious invaders deemed it wiser to rest on the successes of the day than to attempt to follow up the retreat of the Turks. But the Russians bivouseked for the night in the deserted camp. The camp-fires burned brightly and could be seen, doubtless, from the village of Matchin, distant only two and a half to three miles. During the night the utmost activity prevailed in the camp, and it was soon generally known that Matchin was to be attacked on the mor-
