

And still the centuries love to tell of victory's glorious sheen,
That gilds the plain whereon he fell, to keep his glory green:
For his renown is England's might that finds her own the same
Of those who death have dared in fight, for the honour of her name.

