There is a freshness in early triumphs which like the fragrance of the dawn, is lost. But of all sweet thoughts in the countless chambers of the hallowed memories, the days, the years we spent together, be the dearest and most cherished by the sanction and aid of our worthy professors. In life with all the energy of childhood. Bright and shining horizons. But before the dawning of the world, we must see all its phases and overcome the obstacles. Friends, let us be true to our Alma Mater, let us be true to each other, let us be true to the life. Now, therefore, may fortune deal out to you portion of success. And when she shall have passed into the known realm of eternity, meet there where signs and are no more.

FREDERICK ROBINSON ROSES HIS LIFE AT WOOLSTOCK AS RESULT OF YACHTS COLLIDING

The pretty suburb of Woolstock and the surrounding district were thrown into gloom yesterday by a sad drowning accident in which Fred L. Robinson, a promising young man of this city lost his life. The disaster was a peculiar one. Mr. Robinson was speared from a boat in the river as the result of a collision. Despite the heroic efforts of a companion, L. G. Sinclair, to rescue him, Robinson went down for the third time.

Frederick Robinson employed on the gun counter in the W. H. Thomas & Co.'s establishment. In company with Mr. Sinclair and two others he secured a boat and anchored above the Westfield wharf for the night. The boat, owned by Charles Elwell and sailed by James I. Rootes and Harold Stone anchored near the other boat. The boat, owned by Charles Elwell and sailed by James I. Rootes and Harold Stone anchored near the other boat.

HERR VON HOLSTEIN, THE MAN BEHIND THE SCENES

"The world knows nothing of its greatest men." Contemporary history has hardly given a more remarkable illustration of a famous phrase than is afforded by the death of Herr von Holstein.

For a long generation he had been the familiar figure of the German Foreign Office, and to preserve real position and sacrificed everything that ambition of the weaker sort understands by notoriety.

For the things that minister to ordinary vanity this strong soul cared not. Enough for him that the patterns upon which he worked should be so much admired for themselves that the world should forget to ask what weaving fingers were hidden behind the stuff. He sought for the substance of life, as he understood it. He despised the show, in its sense of sensationalism he had until recently the distinction of being less than any other individual playing a potent role in the world's affairs.

That distinction was supreme of its kind. Herr von Holstein was in his own occult sphere a master. His influence extended to the very heart of the German Foreign Office as the result of his initiative, was mighty and came very near to results that history, whether it might count them disastrous or splendid, would never forget.

Even before Bismarck's fall his ability and force of character were such that he counted for a good deal at the Wilhelmstrasse. At that time, when he was in the position of minister, the only person who knew the whole secret of the iron Chancellor's mind and tradition, it might have been said of him that he knew not so much part of German Foreign Office as the rest of it. The entirety of that potent institution seemed to be incorporated in him.

"What's done we partly may compute but know not what's prevented." No individual ever born could see the whole of things from his own angle of vision. Success is apt to breed conceit. In the fortunate man it merely most like to lead to his undoing. For this reason the greatest persons are even more in need of good advice than perhaps still more rarely find it.

Also there are very few persons who have the astonishing faculty required to be a power behind the scenes—ability of the great order of self-enclosedness. These qualifications are as uncommon as precious, yet they undoubtedly exist.

Statesmen have to think of many things besides their work. Their reputation is always upon their nerves, and it may be affected by which that goes on in other people's departments. They can never forget the interests of their party as a whole, and are henceforth a certain amount of work for it. They rarely remain long enough in office to get an independent and complete mastery of the business.

That was, as we have said, the position of Herr von Holstein. Now, it is certain that in various countries and in various walks of life there are men who are closely connected with the shape the policy of nations, to set on foot great public schemes, who help to make and unmake the reputation of others, who take a vital part in the creation of great enterprises, who mould opinion, who play on most other persons as upon the notes on a keyboard, who in short, exercise immense influence, and whose names are heard, and of whom very few people have ever heard.

What is the chief requisite for this kind of power? We shall be told that it may be expressed in one word—"talent." That is true, but only in a special sense, which requires to be more closely defined. Stupidity is inarticulate. Faculty of words is sometimes the unfailing index to paucity of ideas. The Elizabethans were masters of action, but they gloried no less in great talk than in great adventures. Alexander was a person of considerable flow, and Caesar could play the orator when he pleased. Frederick the Great could be stern, concise, incisive when the occasion required, but at other times he expanded in conversation like a Puffinblatter. Napoleon's case is more subtle, but though he could both use eloquence and despise it, he could not be described broadly as a silent man. Bismarck was a magnificent talker—and his whole genius was expressed in the Shakespearean variety, the humor, the power, the depth of his conversation. Nor is it by any means important, particular. The only antagonist of the actors is the varied repertoire with unusual excellence.

Four Famed Queens Who Use Cigarettes; Most Royal Women Smoke Nowadays

QUEEN VICTORIA OF ENGLAND, QUEEN ALEXANDRA OF GREECE, QUEEN ELIZABETH OF ROMANIA, and QUEEN MARIE FEODOROVNA OF RUSSIA.

According to London Sketch, which proudly prints testimonials of character from King Edward, the majority of the crowned women of Europe do smoke cigarettes. But they don't use them in public. If Carmen Sylva and King Alfonso's mother were to exchange such questions and replies, it would be in the privacy of their boudoirs.

NEW YORK TO HAVE HIGH PRICE THEATRE

Little Playhouse in 39th Street With Some Novel Ideas. Boxes Will be More Expensive Than the Metropolitan's—To Give One Act Plays and an Up-to-date Burlesque.

New York is to have still another theatre next winter. This new institution, which is to be opened to the public on November 2, will be called the Little Theatre. It is to be situated in West Thirty-ninth street opposite the Metropolitan Opera House and will occupy a garage which has been vacant since the latter part of 1907.

The founders of the Little Theatre, the announcement reads, "intend to present to the public a series of one act plays, burlesques, and other sensational successes of some Parisian stages such as the Capucines, the Mathurins, and the Theatre Royal and from the best of the American, English and German sketches. Every one of known skill will adapt into English the short foreign plays with the particular view of preserving the flavor, character and wit of the originals while avoiding all license."

In addition to these one act plays there will be musical performances to be selected from the works of Grieg, Porgiesi and other composers, who wrote for such an intimate theatre and whose works are not adapted for performance in the larger playhouses of the day. But the most characteristic feature of this new playhouse will be a review to be called "Tell Me All About It," which will be changed from night to night so as to include the burlesques of the most recent events of the day and is in fact intended to be a species of dramatic 'o'clock extra dealing with what has just happened.

IMPRISONED ONE NIGHT IN MOUNTAIN CAVE

MANCHESTER, June 20.—Five members of the Yorkshire Ramblers' Club have had a weird and exciting week-end adventure. Engaged in exploring Gaping Ghyll, one of the deepest and most famous "pot" holes in England, they were unable to regain the surface owing to an influx of water, and were imprisoned in the bowels of a mountain for one night.

A VAST 'POT'. Gaping Ghyll is picturesquely situated on the shoulder of Inglesborough, Northeast Yorkshire, a mountain some 2,000 feet high. At the foot of the "pot" is a vault over 450 feet long, 120 feet high and 80 feet wide, and the "pot" could easily accommodate Manchester Town Hall.

HAD PLenty OF FOOD. The lone vigi was at last broken by the restoration of communication with those above, and the final splurge of the party was effected in the early hours of yesterday morning.

TO RULE ALL EUROPE IS GERMAN AMBITION

Alliances With Powers Would Make Her Invincible. Meeting of Kaiser and Czar Designed to Checkmate Diplomacy of England.

BERLIN, June 19.—Extraordinary importance is attributed here to the meeting of the Kaiser and the Czar in the Baltic sea. If possible, Germany will seize this opportunity of driving the thin end of the wedge between Great Britain and Russia.

Great stress has been laid on the fact that the Czar took the initiative in proposing this meeting, whereby Germany intend to intimate that Russia, although closely connected by real agreement with Britain, nevertheless attaches great importance to the cultivation of more cordial relations with Germany.

MANY KILLED AND INJURED IN COLLISION

SOUTH BEND, Ind., June 20.—Ten persons were killed and forty injured in a wreck on the Chicago, Lake Shore and South Bend railway, in Porter county, Ind., last night, two of the electric cars colliding head-on. According to General Manager H. U. Wallace, the wreck was due to a disobedience of orders by Motorman George A. Reed of the eastbound car, who was killed.

Read received instructions at Cary to wait at Wilson, a short distance west of Ballietown, the point at which the disaster occurred, for the westbound car to pass. The impact of the cars was so great that they were reduced to a mass of wreckage. The eastbound car was going at fifty miles an hour at the time of the collision, and the westbound car was going at thirty miles an hour. The collision occurred when the eastbound car was about half a mile from the westbound car. The passengers of the westbound train escaped with trifles.

REPORT OF ALBANIA BATTLE IS CONFIRMED

Albanians Refused to Obey Governor or Pay Taxes. CONSTANTINOPLE, June 19.—Reports of a recent battle in northern Albania between 10,000 Turkish troops and twelve battalions of Turkish troops have been confirmed. It appears that the Albanians rebelled against the new regime and refused to obey the local governors or to pay taxes. Djevdet Pasha, military commander at Uskub, was ordered to suppress the rebellion, and he has succeeded in doing so. The Albanians were driven from the mountains, and some of the tribe continued guerrilla warfare. It is reported that the government, fearing the insurrection, will become general, has ordered Djevdet Pasha to suspend hostilities and endeavor to reach a pacific settlement of the trouble.
