I love the land that gave me birth. 'Tho' cold her north wind blows; I love her ice bound winter lakes. I claim a kinship to the flakes Thatform her virgin snows

I've roved in many a Southern clime Where orange blossoms wave: Where broad bananas fan the air Where flourishes the citron fair. Beside the azure wave.

I've lain within the myrile's shade, Beneath the waving palm, Amid the oleander groves. Where summer perfume ever rove With many a fragrant balm.

I've pulled the luscious, fragrant pine, And culled pomegranates fair; The sugar apple of the South, And dates-those congrors of the drouth And chirimozas rare.

I've seen beneath the chrystal wave The coral insects' home Bright flowers that with the rainbow vie. And beauteous shells that scattered lie, Beneath the occan's foam.

I've watched the molten tropic's sun. Go down beneath the sea. Where Chimborazo cleaves the sky, Ablaze with many a sunset dye, Reflected on our lea.

I've watched the ponderous sport of whales, In Southern seas at play, I've watched the Chilian condor's flight To tow'ring crags, where first the light Proclaims the dawning day.

I've seen the lightning flash from eyes Where midnight shadows lie: When Spain's proud daughters met my view With locks that mock the raven's hue. Whose pinions cleave the sky.

Bermuda's daughters, too, I've seen, Whose beauties Moore has sung; And friendship's warm right hand I've met (I feel the tingling pulses yet) From strangers roved among.

But ever turns my heart to thee. My bright Canadian home ! And dearer grow thy broad blue lakes Thy silver streams, thy woodland brakes-With every step I roam

The proud magnolia's bloom I love. The.m. rtle's perfuned shades; But oh 1 w dear above them all A single orimson leaf let fall By H in ... maple glades.

A Young Wife Plays a Practical Joke on her Husband and is Punished.

A Burlington man recently wedded a young wife. The lady became enthused over Will Carleton's tale of the elopement of a handsome young woman with a handsomer man, and determined to try the same thing herself.
