original version of "Yankee Doodle" was written by a British officer. Before the American revolution took place, a British army was gathering to march against the French at Forth derful penetrating and pain subduing power of Nerviline—the great nerve of raw militia were coming in to join the force, and Army Surgeon R. cupied by Elzear Pain, wife, a son and daughter. Mrs. Pain and her son, a dedicated to the raw recruits, who were furnishing much amusement to their lives by throwing themselves the British officers by their greenness and awkwardness:

"YANKEE DOODLE." Father and I went down to camp, Along with Captain Goodwin And there we saw the girls and boys As thick as hasty pudding.

Chorus. Yankee Doodle, keep it up, Yankee Doodle, dandy: Mind the music and the step And with the girls be handy.

I guess there was a million.

And then the feathers on his hat-They looked so tarnal finey-

A load for father's cattle. And every time they fired it off

It made a noise like father's gun, Only a nation louder.

And father went as near again-I thought the deuce was in him.

Nor stopped, as I remember, Till I got home and safely locked

Its heads were made of leather; They knocked upon 't with little sticks To call the folks together.

And fire right in our faces; It scared me almost half to death To see them run such races.

Uncle Sam came there to change Some pancakes and some onions. To give his wife and young ones.

MR. BROWNS LOST CREEL

Tardy Revelation of the Facts About the Loss of Fourteen Pounds of Trout. "I lost a borrowed trout creel once," said Banana Bob Brown, the cigar man, "and was so mad at myself for not following it up and recovering it that I never told the owner how I came to lose it, but bought him another and never said a word. This happened up in Sullivan county.

"The creel was a fifteen pound one, and the morning I strapped it on, ready to start out after the fifteen pounds of trout necessary to fill it, the landlord of the house where I was stopping said:

"Where are you going, Mr. Brown?"

"Oh,' I said. 'I'm going to Jumping Creek. Trout there, isn't there?' 'Ought to be,' said the landlord. 'If the bears haven't fished 'em all out.'

"'Bears,' I said and I had to laugh. "'That's right,' said the landlord 'Sure! Bears can beat watersnakes catching trout. Watersnakes can beat coons, and coons can beat the best trout fisherman that ever went out carrying his fly hook where everyone can see it, and his bait box hid in his ''Fudge' I said and went my way

"I had great luck that day. creel I carried belonged to a man who had always lived in the village I borrowed it, because I thought my own creel was too small. It held only ten pounds. I had almost filled the fifteen-pound creel. I only lacked two pounds. I came to a pool where I knew I could get the needed two pounds of trout, and at first thought I would make short work of it by killing a two-pounder, but afterward made up my mind that it would be more sport to kill two one-pounders. So I pre-pared to do that. I had to clamber down a steep, rocky place to get to hogs intended to be sold for export and to fetch the highest price. Then that aggravating and impudent bear held up the trout for me to look at, snapped his jaws at me in a way that made my dander rise right up, and waddled out of the creek into the bushes, taking my trout along. I can't remember when I had been so mad as I was to see that bear walk away with my prize.

"'Not if I know it, you don't get away with that fish!' I hollered, and shinned up that rock to head the bear off and make him stand and deliver up that trout or take the consequences. When I got back to the top of the rock after that robber bear family, recovering the property they had looted me ishment as they richly deserved. I was so taken aback that I stood there like a chump and let them escape. When I came to some degree of reason I was so mad at myself that I went ashamed to tell how I really had lost the creel, and faked up some story of its having tumbled into the creek and been washed away. This is the time I ever gave away the truth about losing that creel, and I feel better for
