SCORES OF THE CANADIANS HALT IN THE WHITE STAR DEAL

Bad Weather Conditions for Final Stage of the King's Prize-A Clergyman's Feat.

London, July 28.-Bisley can usually be depended upon to furnish something new in the shooting line, and this year has not proved an exception. A clergyman, who was entered in one of the mediumand the English shipping lines of the range contests, astonished the competitors and threw the spectators into spasms of curiosity by lying hidden behind a fence and firing without exposing his head to look along his gunbarrel. He made a score of 34 points out of a possible 35. Everyone howled. The clergyman had attached to his gun an invention of his own, called a hyposcope, which enabled him to sight his weapon by an arrangement of little mirrors in a vertical tube. The possibilities of this invention, as will be recognized, are great. Equipped with this humane device, two forces, taking cover without artillery, would shoot at hyposcopes instead of each other's heads. The force first deprived of its apparatus might be considered hors de combat. There would be no bloodshed beyond an occasional cut finger. It is claimed that this improvement should add to the popularity of soldiering, and at the same time promote its true purpose— peace. Advocates of the hyposcope point out that it would make the cowgrieve, smoke inspector, the new office recently created there. Mr. Fairgrieve ard as good as the brave man. War would become a genuine test of marksmanship. Instead of casualty lists there would be Bisley scores.

KING'S PRIZE. The last stage of the shooting for the King's prize at the National Rifle Association meeting at Bisley was favor-ed by beautiful weather Saturday, but a gusty wind blew across the range, interfering materially with the long-range shooting. A large crowd follower the competitors over the 800, 900 and 1,000 yards distance. Lord Roberts, the commander-in-chief, was among the spectators. Corp. Just before the storm broke yesterday, the hoist was safely anchored about 400 feet up the track, two chains, each an inch and an eighth thick, holding it in place. The Michigan Central car ferry Transport, which had been at the yards since July 7, having her deck supports strengthened, lay in the dock directly in front of the Brown

There a timber 12x12, arose to block its way, but it might as well have been a toothpick, for the hoist snapped it in a twinkling, and with a love of fully 20 foot it worked beavily. leap of fully 30 feet it crashed heavily to the deck of the transport. Any other boat would have been sunk immediately, but the immense car ferry stood under the strain, her upper works demolished, but her hull and machinery practically uninjured.

Had the accident happened any other time but Sunday more than a hundred men might have lost their lives. Fortunately only one man, the watchman employed by the Michigan Central, was on board, and his escape was an almost miraculous one. He was standing under the port smokestack when he saw the hoist running down the track. "The Twentieth Century Limited." A poem written on the occasion of the placing in service of the 20-hour train between New York and Chicago, by the new York Central and Lake Shore, June 15th 1909.

Ho! for the Twentieth Century Train, Ho! for the mind and the might and the That have made out of steel and steam To conquer all distance, and to render vain
The efforts of Time to set the pace
In the winged and winning, wonderful The whole wide world is making today, The whole wide world is making today, As if all Progress were running away. Out of the East, like the rising sun, The T. C. T. sets forth on its run To the far-off West, as we measure space, But the near-by West, as it runs the race. And, rolling along on its velvet course, The flying emblem of moving force, It speeds by river and town and plain, Into the darkness and out again, In sight for a moment, then lost to the eye, Like the ghost of a going we may hear fitting by, Until with a scream of whistle, and shake

Of its fiery head it stops by the lake,
A thousand miles to the Westward, and then
Impatient to fly to the Eastward again.
Triumphant and timeless, the T. C. T.
Brings the shores of the lake and the shores of the sea
In touch with each other, uniting as one
The lands of the rising and the setting sun.
Ho! for the Twentieth Century Train,
Ho! for the mind and the might and the main, Whose banner of steam and of steel is To lead in the race of the speeds of the world. world.
Here's to the wonderful T. C. T.
